320.04 VIE view of the Son Jacos of Vociety In Ewofe vol.-/

Librarian.

Uttarpara Joykushus Public Library

Govt. of West Bengal

TO THE

K I N G.

SIR,

I PRESUME to lay before Your Majesty the:
History of a Period, which, if the abilities of the Writer were equal to the dignity of the Subject, would not be unworthy the attention of a Monarch, who is no less a Judge than a Patron of Literary Merit.

HISTORY claims it as her prerogative to offer instruction to KINGS, as well as to their people.

What restections the Reign of the Emperor

Unarpara Jaik-ishna Public Library

CHARLES

Acca. No....... Dale .- manufacture

DEDICATION

CHARLES V. may suggest to Your Majesty, it becomes not me to conjecture. But your Subjects cannot observe the various calamities, which that Monarch's ambition to be distinguished as a Conqueror, brought upon his dominions, without recollecting the selicity of their own times, and looking up with gratitude to their Sovereign, who, during the servour of youth, and amidst the career of victory, possessed such self-command, and maturity of judgment, as to set bounds to his own triumphs, and prefer the blessings of peace to the splendour of military glory.

Posterity will not only celebrate the Wisdom of Your Majesty's choice, but will enumerate the many Virtues, which render Your Reign conspicuous for a facred regard to all the duties, incumbent on the Sovereign of a Free People.

P R O O F

S SPANNANT TRANSPORT

AND

ILLUSTRATIONS.

NOTE I. SECT. I. p. 2. [A].

HE consternation of the Britons, when invaded by the Picts and Caledonians after the Roman legions were called out of the island, may give some idea of the degree of debasement to which the human mind was reduced by long scrvitude under the Romans. In their supplicatory letter to Actius, which they call the groans of Britain, "We know not (say they) which way to turn us. The barbarians drive us to the sea; and the sea forces us back on the barbarians; between which we have only the choice of two deaths, either to be swallowed up by the waves, or to be butchered by the sword." Histor. Gildæ. ap. Gale. Hist. Britan. Script. p. 6.

One can scarce believe this dastardly race, to be the descendants of that gallant people, who repulsed Cæsar, and descended their liberty so long against the Roman arms.

NOTE II. SECT. I. p. 4. [B]

THE barbarous nations were not only illiterate, but regarded literature with contempt. They found the inhabitants of all the provinces of the Empire funk in effeminacy, and averse to C c 2 war.

Such a character was the object of fcorn to an highspirited and gallant race of men. "When we would brand an enemy," fays Liutprandus, 'with difgraceful and contumelious appellations, we call him a Roman; hoc folo, id est Romani nomine, quicquid ignobilitatis, quicquid timiditatis, quicquid avaritiz, quicquid luxuriz, quicquid mendacii, immo quicquid vitiorum est comprehendentes." Liutprandi Legatio apud Murat. Scriptor. Italic. vol. ii. pars. 1. p. 481. This degeneracy of manners, illiterate barbarians imputed to their love of learning. Even after they fettled in the countries which they had conquered, they would not permit their children to be instructed in any science; "for, (said they), instruction in the sciences tends to corrupt, enervate, and deprefs the mind; and he who has been accustomed to tremble under the rod of a pedagogue, will never look on a fword or fpear with an undaunted eyc." Procop. de bello Gothor. lib. i. p. 4. ap. Script. Byz. vol. i. A confiderable number of years elapsed, before nations so rude, and so unwilling to learn, could produce historians capable of recording their transactions, or of describing their manners and institutions. By that time, all memory of their ancient condition was loft, and no monument remained to guide their first writers to any certain knowledge If one expects to receive any fatisfactory account of the manners and laws of the Coths, Lombards, or Franks, during their residence in those countries where they were originally feated, from Jornandes, Paulus Warnefridus, or Gregory of Tours, the earliest and most authentick historians of these people. he will be miterably disappointed. Whatever imperfect view has been conveyed to us of their ancient flate, we owe not to their own writers, but to the Greek and Roman historians.

PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

NOTE III. SECT. I. p. 5. [C].

A CIRCUMSTANCE related by Priscus in his history of the embassy to Attila, King of the Huns, gives a striking view of the enthusiastick passion for war, which prevailed among the barbarous nations. When the entertainment to which that sterce conqueror admitted the Roman ambassadors was ended, two Scythians advanced towards Attila, and recited a poem in which they celebrated his victories, and military virtues. All the Huns sixed their eyes with attention on the bards. Some seemed to be delighted with the verses; others, remembering their own battles and exploits, exulted with joy; while those who were become feeble through age, burst out into tears, bewailing the decay of their vigour, and the state of inactivity in which they were now obliged to remain. Excerpta ex historia Prisci Rhetoris ap. Byzant. Histor. Script. edit. Venet. v. i. p. 45.

NOTE IV. SECT. I. p. 11. [D]

A REMARKABLE confirmation of both parts of this reasoning occurs in the history of England. The Saxons carried on the conquest of that country with the same destructive spirit, which distinguished the other barbarous nations. The ancient inhabitants of Britain were either exterminated; or forced to take shelter among the mountains of Wales; or reduced into servitude. The Saxon government, laws, manners and language were of confequence introduced into Britain; and were so perfectly established, that all memory of the institutions previous to their conquest was abolished. The very reverse of this happened in a subsequent revolution. A single victory placed William the Norman on the throne of England. The Saxon inhabitants though oppressed, were not exterminated. William employed the utmost efforts of his power and policy to make his new subjects conform in every thing to the Norman standard; but without success. The Saxons, though vanquished, were far more numerous than their conquerors; when they began to incorporate, their laws and manners gradually gained ground. The Norman institutions were unpopular and odious; many of them fell into disuse; and in the English constitution and language, at this day, many essential parts are manifestly of Saxon, not of Norman extract.

NOTE V. SECT. I. p. 11. [E].

PROCOPIUS, the historian, declines, from a principle of benevolence, to give any particular detail of the cruelties of the Goths; "Left, fays he, I should transinit a monument and example of inhumanity to fucceeding ages." Proc. de bello Goth. lib. iii. cap. 10. ap. Byz. Script. vol. i., 126. But as the change, which I have pointed out as a confequence of the fettlement of the barbarous nations in the countries formerly fubject to the Roman Empire, could not have taken place, if the greater part of the ancient inhabitants had not been extirpated, an event of fuch importance and influence merits a more particular illustration. This will justify me for exhibiting some part of that melancholy spectacle, over which humanity prompted Procopius to draw a veil. I shall not, however, disgust my readers by a long detail; but rest satisfied with collecting some instances of the devastations made by two of the many nations, which fettled in the Empire. The Vandals

PREFACE.

Do period in the history of ones own country can be considered as altogether uninteresting. Such transactions as tend to illustrate the progress of its constitution, laws, or manners, merit the utmost attention. Even remote and minute events are objects of a curiosity, which, being natural to the human mind, the gratistication of it is attended with pleasure.

But, with respect to the history of foreign States, we must set other bounds to our desire of information. The universal progress of science during the two last centuries, the art of printing, and other obvious causes, have filled Europe with such a multiplicity of histories, and with such vast collections of historical materials, that the term of human life is too short for the study or even the perusal of them. It is necessary, then, not only for those who are called to conduct the affairs of nations, but for such as inquire and reason concerning them, to remain satisfied with a general knowledge of distant events, and to confine their study of history in detail chiefly to that period, in which the several States of Europe having become intimately connected, the operations of one power are so felt by all, as to influence their councils, and to regulate their measures.

Some boundary, then, ought to be fixed in order to feparate these periods. An ara should be pointed out, prior to which, each country, little connected with those around it, may trace its own history apart; after which, the transactions of every considerable nation in Europe become interesting and instructive to all. With this intention I undertook to write the history of the Emperor Charles V. It was during his administration that the powers of Europe were formed into one great political system, in which each took a station, wherein it has since remained with less variation, than could have been expected after the shocks occasioned by so many internal revolutions, and so many foreign wars. The great events which happened then have not hitherto spent their force. The political principles and maxims, then established, still continue to operate. The ideas concerning the balance of power, then introduced or rendered general, still influence the councils of nations.

THE age of CHARLES V. may therefore be considered as the period at which the political state of Europe began to assume a new form. I have endeavoured to render my account of it, an introduction to the history of Europe subtequent to his reign. While his numerous Biographers describe his personal qualities and actions; while the historians of different countries relate occurrences the confequences of which were local or transient, it hath been my purpose to record only those great transactions in his reign, the effects of which were universal, or continue to be permanent.

As my readers could derive little instruction from fuch a history of the reign of Charles V. without fome a 2

fome information concerning the state of Europe previous to the fixteenth century, my defire of fupplying this has produced a preliminary volume, in which I have attempted to point out and explain the great causes and events, to whose operation all the improvements in the political state of Europe. from the subversion of the Roman Empire to the beginning of the fixteenth century, must be ascribed. I have exhibited a view of the progress of society in Europe, not only with respect to interior government. laws and manners, but with respect to the command of the national force requisite in foreign operations; and I have described the political constitution of the principal states in Europe at the time when Charles V. began his reign.

In this part of my work I have been led into feveral critical disquisitions, which belong more properly to the province of the lawyer or antiquary, than to that of the historian. These I have placed at the end of the first volume, under the title of Proofs and Illustrations. Many of my readers will, probably, give little attention to fuch refearches. To fome they may, perhaps, appear the most curious and interesting part of the work. I have carefully pointed out the fources from which I have derived information, and have cited the writers on whose authority I rely with a minute exactness, which might appear to border upon oftentation, if it were posfible to be vain of having read books, many of which nothing but the duty of examining with accuracy whatever I laid before the publick, could have induced me to open. As my inquiries conducted me often into paths which were obscure or little frequented, such constant recourse to the authors who have been my guides, was not only necessary for authenticating the facts which are the foundations of my reasonings, but may be useful in pointing out the way to fuch as shall hereafter hold the same course, and in enabling them to carry on their researches with greater facility and success.

EVERY intelligent reader will observe one omission in my work, the reason of which it is necessary to explain. I have given no account of the conquests of Mexico and Peru, or of the establishment of the Spanish colonies in the continent and islands of America. The history of these these events I originally intended to have related at confiderable length. But upon a nearer and more attentive consideration of this part of my plan, I found that the discovery of the new world; the state of society among its ancient inhabitants; their character, manners, and arts; the genius of the European settlements in its various provinces, together with the influence of these upon the systems of policy or commerce in Europe, were subjects so splendid and important, that a superficial view of them could afford little satisfaction; to treat of them as extensively as they merited, must produce an episode, disproportionate to the principal work. I have therefore reserved these for a separate history; which, if the performance now offered to the publick shall receive its approbation, I propose to undertake.

THOUGH, by omitting fuch confiderable but detached articles in the reign of Charles V. I have circumferibed my narration within more narrow limits, I am yet perfuaded, from this view of the intention and nature of the work which I thought it necessary to lay before my readers, that the plan must still appear to them too extensive, and the undertaking too arduous. I have often felt them to be so. But my conviction of the utility of such a history prompted me to persevere. With what success I have executed it, the publick must now judge. I wait, in sollicitude, for its decision; to which I shall submit with a respectful silence.

have

A VIEW

OF THE

PROGRESS OF SOCIET

FROM THE

SUBVERSION OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE,

BEGINNING OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

CTION

View of the Progress of Society in Europe, with respect to interior Government, Laws and Manners.

WO great revolutions have happened in the political state, and in the manners of the European nations. The first was occasioned by the progress of the the Roman Roman power; the second by the subversion of the Roman Empire. When the spirit of conquest led the armies of Rome Vol. I. beyond

The effects of power on the State of

Utterpera Jaikrichna Public Library

A VIEW OF THE

SECT. I. beyond the Alps, they found all the countries which they invaded, inhabited by people whom they denominated barbarians, but who were nevertheless brave and independant. These defended their ancient possessions with obstinate valour. It was by the superiority of their discipline, rather than of their courage, that the Romans gained any advantage over them. A fingle battle did not, as among the effeminate inhabitants of Asia, decide the fate of a state. The vanquished people resumed their arms with fresh spirit, and their undisciplined valour, animated by the love of liberty, supplied the want of conduct as well as of union. During these long and fierce struggles for dominion or indepen-The defoladance, the countries of Europe were successively laid waste, a great part of their inhabitants perished in the field, many were carried into flavery, and a feeble remnant, incapable of further resistance, submitted to the Roman power.

tion which it occasioned.

The improvements which it introduced.

THE Romans having thus defolated Europe, fet themselves to civilize it. The form of government which they established in the conquered provinces, though fevere, was regular, and preserved public tranquility. As a consolation for the loss of liberty, they communicated their arts, sciences, language, and manners, to their new subjects. Europe began to breathe, and to recover strength after the calamities which it had undergone; agriculture was encouraged; population encreased; the ruined cities were rebuilt; new towns were founded; an appearance of prosperity succeeded, and repaired, in some degree, the havock of war.

The bad confequences of their domi-BIOD.

This state, however, was far from being happy, or favourable to the improvement of the human mind. The vanquished nations were difarmed by their conquerors, and overawed by foldiers

foldiers kept in pay to restrain them. They were given up as Secr. I. a prey to rapacious governors, who plundered them with impunity; and were drained of their wealth by exorbitant taxes, imposed with so little attention to the situation of the provinces, that the impositions were generally encreased in proportion to their inability to support them. They were deprived of their most enterprizing citizens, who reforted to a distant capital in quest of preferment, or of riches; and were accustomed in all their actions to look up to a superior, and tamely to receive his commands. Under all these depressing circumstances, it was impossible that they could retain vigour or generofity of mind. The martial and independant spirit, which had distinguished their ancestors, became extinct among all the people subjected to the Roman yoke; they loft not only the habit but even the capacity of deciding for themselves, or of acting from the impulse of their own minds; and the dominion of the Romans, like that of all great Empires, degraded and debased the human species [A].

A SOCIETY in this state could not subsist long. There were The irruption defects in the Roman government, even in its most perfect form, our nations. which threatened its diffolution. Time ripened these original feeds of corruption, and gave birth to many new diforders. constitution, unfound, and worn out, must have fallen in pieces of itself, without any external shock. The violent irruption of the Goths, Vallals, Huns, and other barbarians hastened this event, and recipitated the downfal of the Empire. New nations cemed to arise, and to rush from unknown regions in order to tall vengeance on the Romans for the calamities which they had salicted on mankind. These fierce tribes either inhabited the various provinces in Germany which had never been

[A] NOTE I.

B 2

fy'dued

A VIEW OF THE

BECT. I. subdued by the Romans, or were scattered over the vast countries in the north of Europe, and north-west of Asia, which are now occupied by the Danes, the Swedes, the Poles, the fubjects of the Russian empire, and the Tartars. Their condition, and trantactions previous to their invasion of the Empire are but little known. All our information with respect to these is derived from the Romans; and as they did not penetrate far into countries which were at that time uncultivated and uninviting, the accounts of their original state given by them are extremely imperfect. The rude inhabitants themselves, destitute of science, and of records, without leisure, or curiosity to enquire into remote events, retained, perhaps, some indistinct memory of recent occurrences, but beyond thefe, all was buried in oblivion, or involved in darkness, and in fable [B].

State of the Countries From which they islued.

THE prodigious swarms which poured in upon the Empire from the beginning of the fourth century to the final extinction of the Roman power, have given rife to an opinion that the countries whence they issued were crowded with inhabitants: and various theories have been formed to account for fuch an extraordinary degree of population as hath procured these countries the appellation of The Storehouse of Nations. if we confider that the countries possessed by the people who invaded the Empire were of vast extent; that a great, part of these was covered with woods and marihes; that the of the most considerable of the barbarous nations subsisted entirely by hunting or pasturage, in both which states of society arge racts of land are required for maintaining a few inhabitants; and that all of them were strangers to the arts, and industy, without which population cannot increase to any great degree, it is evident, that these countries could not be so populous in ancient SECT. I times as they are at present, when they still continue to be less peopled than any other part of Europe or of Afia.

(B) NOTE II.

evident.

Bur if these circumstances prevented the barbarous nations The people fit for daring from becoming populous, they contributed to inspire, or to enterprizes. strengthen the martial spirit by which they were distinguished. Inured by the rigour of their climate, or the poverty of their foil, to hardships which rendered their bodies firm, and their minds vigorous; accustomed to a course of life which was a continual preparation for action; and disdaining every occupation but that of war; they undertook, and profecuted their military enterprizes with an ardour and impetuofity, of which men foftened by the refinements of more polished times, can scarce form any idea [C].

THEIR first inroads into the Empire proceeded rather from The motives the love of plunder, than from the defire of new fettlements. excursions. Roufed to arms by some enterprizing or popular leader, they fallied out of their forests; broke in upon the frontier provinces with irrefiftible violence; put all who opposed them to the fword; carried off the most valuable effects of the inhabitants: dragged along multitudes of captives in chains; wasted all before them with fire or fword; and returned in triumph to their wilds and fastnesses. Their success, together with the accounts which they gave of the unknown conveniencies and luxuries that abounded in countries better cultivated, or bleffed with a milder climate than their own, excited new adventurers, and exposed the frontier to new devastations.

[C] NOTE III.

WHEN

A VIEW OF THE

SECT. I.

Their reasons for settling in the countries which they conquered.

WHEN nothing was left to plunder in the adjacent provinces ravaged by frequent incursions, they marched farther from home, and finding it difficult, or dangerous to return, they began to fettle in the countries which they had fubducd. The fudden and short excursions in quest of booty, which had alarmed, and disquieted the Empire, ceased; a more dreadful calamity impended. Great bodies of armed men with their wives and children, and flaves and flocks, iffued forth, like regular colonies, in quest of new settlements. People who had no cities, and feldom any fixed habitation, were fo little attached to their native foil, that they migrated without reluctance from one place to another. New adventurers followed The lands which they deferted were occupied by more remote tribes of barbarians. These, in their turn, pushed forward into more fertile countries, and like a torrent continually increasing, rolled on, and swept every thing before them. In less than two centuries from their first irruption, barbarians of various names and lineage, plundered and took possession of Thrace, Pannonia, Gaul, Spain, Africa, and at last of Italy, and Rome itself. The vast fabrick of the Roman power which it had been the work of ages to perfect, was in that thort period overturned from the foundation.

The extent of their fettlements.

The circumlances which occasioned he downfal of the Roman Empire. Many concurring causes prepared the way for this great revolution, and ensured success to the nations which invaded the Empire. The Roman commonwealth had conquered the world by the wisdom of its civil maxims, and the rigour of its military discipline. But, under the Emperors, the former were forgotten or despised, and the latter was gradually relaxed. The armies of the Empire in the fourth and fifth centuries bore fcarce.

scarce any resemblance to those invincible legions which had SECT. I. been victorious wherever they marched. Instead of freemen, who voluntarily took arms from the love of glory, or of their country, provincials and barbarians were bribed or forced into fervice. They were too feeble, or too proud to submit to the fatigue of military duty. They even complained of the weight of their defensive armour, as intolerable, and laid it aside. fantry, from which the armies of ancient Rome derived their vigour and stability, fell into contempt; the effeminate and undisciplined soldiers of later times could scarce be brought to venture into the field but on horseback. These wretched troops, however, were the only guardians of the Empire. The jealoufy of despotism had deprived the people of the use of arms; and fubjects oppressed and rendered incapable of defending themfelves, had neither spirit nor inclination to resist their invaders. from whom they had little to fear, because they could scarce make their condition more unhappy. As the martial spirit became extinct, the revenues of the Empire gradually diminished. The taste for the luxuries of the East increased to such a pitch in the Imperial court, that great sums were carried into India, from which money never returns. By the vast subsidies paid to the barbarous nations a still greater quantity of species was withdrawn from circulation. The frontier provinces wasted by frequent incursions became unable to pay the customary tribute; and the wealth of the world, which had long centered in the capital of the Empire, ccased to flow thither in the same abundance, or was diverted into other channels. The limits of the Empire continued to be as extensive as ever, while the spirit requisite for its defence declined, and its resources were exhausted. A vast body, languid, and almost unanimated, became

SECT. I. came incapable of any effort to fave itself, and was easily overpowered. The Emperors, who had the absolute direction of this disordered system, sunk in the softness of Eastern luxury, thut up within the walls of a palace, ignorant of war, unacquainted with affairs, and governed entirely by women and cunuchs, or by ministers equally effeminate, trembled at the approach of danger, and under circumstances which called for the utmost vigour in counsel as well as in action, discovered all the impotent irrefolution of fear, and of folly.

The circumflances which contributed to the barbarous nations.

In every respect, the condition of the barbarous nations was the reverse of that of the Romans. Among them, the martial the fuccess of spirit was in full vigour; their leaders were hardy and enterprizing; the arts which had enervated the Romans were unknown among them; and fuch was the nature of their military institutions, that they brought forces into the field without any trouble, and supported them at little expence. The mercenary and effeminate troops stationed on the frontier, astonished at their fierceness, either fled at their approach, or were routed in the first onset. The feeble expedient to which the Emperors had recourse, of taking large bodies of the barbarians into pay, and of employing them to repel new invaders, instead of retarding, hastened the destruction of the Empire. They foon turned their arms against their masters, and with greater advantage than ever: for, by ferving in the Roman armies, they had acquired all the discipline, or skill in war, which the Romans still retained; and upon adding these to their native ferocity, they became altogether irrefiftible.

‡

But though from these, and many other causes, the progress and conquests of the nations which over ran the Empire, became fo extremely rapid, they were accompanied with horrible devastations, and an increasible destruction of the human species. Civilized nations which take arms upon cool reflection, from motives of policy or prudence with a view to guard against some distant danger, or to prevent some nemote contingency, carry on their bullities with fo little rancour, or animolity, that war among them is differed of half his Barbarians are firingers to fuch refinements. They terrors. ruth into war with impersolity, and profesure it with miclence. Their fole object is to make their enemies feel the weight of their vengeance, nor does their rage sublide until it be fatiated with inflicting on them every possible calamity. It is with such a spirit that the savage tribes in America carry on their petty wars. It was with the same spirit that the more powerful and no less fierce barbarians in the north of Europe, and of Asia, fell upon the Roman Empire.

The spirit with which they carried on war.

Wherever they marched, their route was marked with blood. They ravaged or destroyed all around them. They made no distinction between what was facred, and what was profane. They respected no age, or sex, or rank. What escaped the fury of the first inundation perished in those which followed it. The most fertile and populous provinces were converted into deserts, in which were scattered the ruins of villages and cities, that afforded shelter to a few miserable inhabitants whom chance had preserved, or the sword of the enemy, wearied with destroying, had spared. The conquerors who first settled in the countries which they had wasted were expel-

The defolation which they brought upon Europe. SECT. I. led or exterminated by new invaders, who coming from regions farther removed from the civilized parts of the world, were still more fierce and rapacious. This brought new calamities upon mankind, which did not ceafe intil the north, by pouring forth fuccessive swarms, was drained of people, and could no longer furnish instruments of destruction. Famine and peftilence, which always march in the train of war, when it ravages with fuch inconfiderate cruelty, raged in every part of Europe, and completted its sufferings. If a man were called to fix upon the period in the history of the world, during which the condition of the human race was most calamitous and afflicted, he would without hesitation, name that which elapsed from the death of Theodosius the Great, to the establishment of the Lombards in Italy. The contemporary authors who beheld that scene of desolation, labour and are at a loss for expressions to describe the horror of it. The scourge of God, The destroyer of nations, are the dreadful epithets by which they diftinguish the most noted of the barbarous leaders; and they compare the ruin which they had brought on the world, to the havock occasioned by earthquakes, conflagrations, or deluges, the most formidable and fatal calamities which the imagination of man can conceive.

The universal change which they occasioned in the state of Europe.

But no expressions can convey so perfect an idea of the destructive progress of the barbarians as that which must strike an attentive observer, when he contemplates the total change, which he will discover in the state of Europe when it began to recover some degree of tranquillity towards the close of the sixth century.

Theodosius died A. D. 395. The reign of Alboinus in Lombardy, began A. D. 571, so that this period was 176 years.

century. The Saxons were by that time masters of the fouth- SECT. I ern, and more fertile provinces of Britain; the Franks of Gaul; the Huns of Pannonia; the Goths of Spain; the Goths and Lombards of Italy and the adjacent provinces. Scarce any vestige of the Roman policy, jurisprudence, arts, or literature, remained. New forms of government, new laws, new manners, new dreffes, new languages, and new names of men and countries, were every where introduced. To make a great or fudden alteration with respect to any of these, unless where the ancient inhabitants of a country have been almost totally exterminated, has proved an undertaking beyond the power of the greatest conquerors [D]. The total change which the settlement of the barbarous nations occasioned in the state of Europe, may, therefore, be confidered as a more decifive proof, than even the testimony of contemporary historians, of the destructive violence with which they carried on their conquests, and of the havock which they had made from one extremity of this quarter of the globe to the other [E].

In the obscurity of the chaos occasioned by this general wreck of nations, we must search for the seeds of ordered dendeavour to discover the first rudiments of the policy and laws now established in Europe. To this source, the historians of its different kingdoms, have attempted, though with less attention and industry than the importance of the enquiry merits, to trace back the institutions, and customs peculiar to their countrymen. It is not my province to give a minute detail of the progress of government and manners in each particular nation, whose

From this flate of diforder the laws of government now established must be traced.

[D] NOTE IV.

[E] NOTE V.

C 2

transactions

SECT. I. transactions are the object of the following history. But in order to exhibit a just view of the state of Europe at the opening of the fixteenth century, it is necessary to look back, and to contemplate the condition of the northern nations upon their first fettlement in those countries which they occupied. It is necesfary to mark the great steps by which they advanced from barbarism to refinement, and to point out those general principles and events which by their uniform as well as extensive operation conducted all of them to that degree of improvement in policy and in manners which they had attained at the period when Charles V. began his reign.

The principles on which the northern nations made their fettlements in Europe.

WHEN nations subject to despotic government make conquests, these serve only to extend the dominion and the power of their master. But armies composed of freemen conquer for themselves, not for their leaders. The people who overturned the Roman Empire, and fettled in its various provinces, were of the latter class. Not only the different nations that issued from the north of Europe, which has always been confidered as the feat of liberty, but the Hund and Alans who inhabited those countries much have been marked out as the pecuniar region of arvitude, enjoyed freedom and independance to fuch a high degree as feems to be fearce compatible with a state of social union, or with the sub-ordination necessary to maintain t. They followed the chieftain who led them forth in quelt of new settlements, not by constraint, but from choice; not as foldiers whom he could order to march, but as volunteers who offered to accompany him [F]. They confidered their conquests as a common property, SECT. in which all had a title to there, as all had contributed to acquire them [G]. In what manner, or by what principles, they divided among them the lands which they feized, we cannot now determine with any certainty. There is no nation in Europe whose records reach back to this remote period; and there is little information to be got from the uninstructive and meagre chronicles, compiled by writers ignorant of the true end, and unacquainted with the proper objects of history.

f De L'esprit des loix, liv. 17. ch. 3.

THIS new division of property, however, together with the The feudal maxims and manners to which it gave rife, gradually introduced gradually a species of government formerly unknown. This singular, in- enanumed among them. flitution is now distinguished by the name of the Feudal system: and though the barbarous nations which framed it, fettled in their new territories at different times, came from different contries, spoke various languages, and were under the comman of separate leaders, the Feudal policy and laws were established, with little variation, in every kingdom of Europe. This amazing uniformity hath induced fome authors to believe that all these nations, notwithstanding so many apparent circumstances of distinction, were originally the same people. But it may be ascribed with greater probability to the similar state of fociety and of manners to which they were accustomed in their native countries, and to the fimilar fituation in which they found themselves on taking possession of their new domains.

[F] NOTE VI. IGINOTE VII.

i Procop. de Bello Vandal. ap. Script. Byz. edit. Ven. vol. i. p. 345.

National defence the great object of feudal policy.

As the conquerors of Europe had their acquisitions to maintain, not only against such of the ancient inhabitants as they had spared, but against the more formidable inroads of new invaders, felf-defence was their chief care, and feems to have been the fole object of their first institution and policy. Instead of those loose associations, which, though they scarce diminished their personal independance, had been sufficient for their fecurity while they remained in their original countries, they saw the necessity of confederating more closely together, and of relinquishing some of their private rights in order to attain publick safety. Every freeman, upon receiving a portion of the lands which were divided, bound himself to appear in arms against the enemies of the community. This military fervice was the condition upon which he received and held his lands, and as they were exempted from every other burden, that tenure, among a warlike people, was deemed both cal, and honourable. The King or general, who led them to conquest, continuing still to be the head of the colony, had, of course, the largest portion allotted to him. Having thus acquired the means of rewarding past services, as well as of gaining new adherents, he parcelled out his lands with this view, binding those on whom they were bestowed, to follow his standard with a number of men in proportion to the extent of the territory, which they received, and to bear arms in his defence. His chief officers imitated the example of the fovereign, and in distributing portions of their lands among their dependants, annexed the fame condition to the grant. Thus a feudal kingdom resembled a military cstablishment, rather than a civil institution. The victorious army cantoned out in the country which it had seized, continued ranged under its proper officers, and fubordinate to military command.

command. The names of a foldier and of a freeman were fyno- SECT. I. nimous . Every proprietor of land, girt with a fword, was ready to march at the summons of his superior, and to take the field against the common enemy.

But though the Feudal policy feems to be fo admirably cal- The feodal culated for defence against the affaults of any foreign power, its provisions for the interior order and tranquility of society were extremely defective. The principles of disorder and corruption are discernable in that constitution under its best and most per-They foon unfolded themselves, and spreading with feet form. rapidity through every part of the fystem, produced the most fatal effects. The bond of political union was extremely feeble: the fources of anarchy were innumerable. The monarchical and aristocratical parts of the constitution, having no intermediate power to balance them, were perpetually at variance, and justling with each other. The powerful vaffals of the crown foon extorted a confirmation for life of those grants of land. which being at first purely gratuitous, had been bestowed only during pleasure. Not satisfied with this, they prevailed to have them converted into hereditary possessions. One step more compleated their usurpations, and rendered them unalienable [H]. With an ambition no less enterprizing, and more preposterous, they appropriated to themselves titles of honour, as well as offices of power or trust. These personal marks of distinction, which the publick admiration bestows on illustrious merit, or which the publick confidence confers on extraordinary abilities, were annexed to certain families, and transmitted like fiefs, from government defective in its providens for interior order in for cisty.

Du Cange Glossar. voc. Miles.

[H] NOTE VIII.

father

Ultarpara Jaikrichna Public Library Acon. No.27 4 91 Date 8 11

SECT. I. father to fon by hereditary right. The crown vaffals having thus fecured the possession of their lands and dignities, the nature of the Feudal institutions, which though founded in fubordination, verged to independence, led them to new, and still more dangerous encroachments on the prerogatives of the fovereign. They obtained the power of supreme jurisdiction both civil and criminal within their own territories; the right of coining money; together with the privilege of carrying on war against their private enemies in their own name, and by their own authority. The ideas of political fubication were almost entirely lost, and frequently scarce any appearance of feudal subordination remained. Nobles who had acquired fuch enormous power, fcorned to confider themselves as fubiects. They aspired openly at being independant: the bonds which connected the principal members of the conflitution with the crdwn, were diffolved. A kingdom confiderable in name and in extent, was broken into as many separate principalities as it contained powerful barons. A thousand causes of jealoufy and discord subsisted among them, and gave rise to as many wars. Every country in Europe, wasted or kept in continual alarm during these endless contests, was filled with castles and places of strength, erected for the security of the inhabitants, not against foreign force, but against internal hostilities. An universal anarchy, destructive, in a great meafure, of all the advantages which men expect to derive from fociety, prevailed. The people, the most numerous as well as the most useful part of the community, were either reduced to a flate of actual fervitude, or treated with the fame insolence and rigour as if they had been degraded into that wretched condition [I]. The King, stripped of almost every prerogative, and without authority to enact or to execute falutary laws, could neither protect the innocent, nor punish the SECT. I. guilty. The nobles, superior to all restraint, harrassed each other with perpetual wars, oppressed their fellow subjects and humbled or infulted their lovereign. To crown all, time gradually fixed, and rendered venerable this pernicious system, which violence had established.

44

SUCH was the flate of Europe with respect to the interior It prevented administration of government from the seventh to the eleventh wife from century. All the external operations of its various states, vigour in their during this period, were, of course, extremely feeble. kingdom difmembered, and torn with diffention, without any common interest to rouze, or any common head to conduct its force, was incapable of acting with vigour. Almost all the wars in Europe, during the ages which I have mentioned, were trifling, indecifive, and productive of no confiderable event. They refembled the short incursions of pirates or banditti, rather than the steady operations of a regular army. Every baron at the head of his vasfals, carried on some petty enterprize to which he was prompted by his own ambition, or revenge. The flate itself, destitute of union, either remained altogether inactive, or if it attempted to make any effort, that ferved only to discover its impotence. The superior genius of Charlemagne, it is true, united all these disjointed and discordant members, and forming them again into one body, restored that degree of activity to government which distinguish his reign, and render the transactions of it, objects not only of attention but of admiration to more enlightened times. this state of union and vigour not being natural to the feudal government, was of short duration. Immediately upon his death, the spirit which animated and sustained the vast system

nati ne likeexternal ope--rations

SECT. I. which he had chablished, being withdrawn, it broke into pieces. All the calamities which flow from anarchy and discord, returning with additional force, afflicted the different kingdoms into which his Empire was split. From that time to the eleventh century, a fuccession of uninteresting events; a series of wars, the motives as well as the confequences of which were equally unimportant, fill and deform the annals of all the nations in Europe.

The fital estitute of this fate of fociety on filer ces and arts:

To these pernicious effects of the feudal anarchy, may be added its fatal influence on the character and improvement of the human mind. If men do not enjoy the protection of regulargovernment, together with the certainty of personal security which naturally flows from it, they never attempt to make progress in science, nor aim at attaining resument in taste, or in manners. That period of turbulence, oppression, and rapine, which I have described, was ill suited to favour improvement in any of these. In less than a century after the barbarous nations settled in their new conquests, almost all the effects of the knowledge and civility which the Romans had forcad through Europe disappeared. Not only the arts of elegance which minister to luxury, and are supported by it, but many of the nfeful arts, without which life can fcarce be confidered as comfortable, were neglected or loft. Literature, science, taffe, were words fearce in use during the ages we are contemplating; or if they occur at any time, eminence in them is afceibed to perfons and productions fo contemptible that it appears their true import was little understood. Persons of the highest rank, and in the most eminent stations could not read or write. Many of the clergy did not understand the breviary which they were obliged daily to recite; some of SECT. I. them could scarce read it [K]. All memory of past transactions was loft, or preserved in annals filled with trifling events, or legendary tales. Even the codes of laws published by the several nations which established themselves in the different countries of Europe, fell into disuse, while in their place, customs, vague and capricious, were substituted. The human mind neglected, uncultivated, and depressed, sunk into the most profound ignorance. Europe did not produce, during four centuries, one author who merits to be read, either on account of the elegance of his composition, or the justness and novelty of his sentiments. There is scarce one invention useful or ornamental to society of which that long period can boaft.

EVEN the Christian religion, though its precepts are delivered. Upon reliand its inftitutions are fixed in scripture with a precision which should have exempted them from being misinterpreted or corrupted, degenerated during those ages of darkness into an illiberal fuperstition. The barbarous nations when converted to Christianity changed the object, not the spirit of their religious worthip. They endeavoured to conciliate the favour of the true God by means not unlike to those which they had cmployed in order to appeale their falle deities. Instead of aspiring to fanclity and virtue, which alone can render men acceptable to the great author of order and of excellence, they imagined that they fatisfied every obligation of duty by a ferupulous obfervance of external ceremonies [L]. Religion, according to their conception of it, comprehended nothing elfe; and the rites, by which they perfuaded themselves that they could gain the

[K] NOTE X.

[L] NOTE XI.

D 2

favour

SECT. I.

favour of heaven, were of such a nature as might have been expected from the rude ideas of the ages which devised and introduced them. They were either so unmeaning as to be altogether unworthy of the Being to whose honour they were consecrated; or so absurd as to be a disgrace to reason and humanity [M]. Charlemagne in France, and Alfred the Great in England, endeavoured to dispel this darkness, and gave their subjects a short glimpse of light and knowledge. But the ignorance of the age was too powerful for their efforts and institutions. The darkness returned, and settled over Europe more thick and heavy than formerly.

Upon the chasacter and virtues of the human mind.

As the inhabitants of Europe during these centuries were strangers to the arts which embellish a polished age, they were destitute of the virtues which abound among people who continue in a simple state. Force of mind, a sense of personal dignity, gallantry in enterprize, invincible perseverance in execution, and contempt of danger and of death, are the characterisfic virtues of uncivilized nations. But these are all the offspring of equality and independence, both which the feudal inflitutions had destroyed. The spirit of domination corrupted the nobles; the yoke of fervitude depressed the people; the generous fentiments inspired by a sense of equality were extinguished, and nothing remained to be a check on ferocity and violence. Human fociety is in its most corrupted state at that period when men have loft their original independence and fimplicity of manners, but have not attained that degree of refinement which introduces a fense of decorum and of propriety in conduct, as a restraint on those passions which lead to heinous crimes.

[M] NOTE XII.

Accordingly, a greater number of those atrocious actions which SECT. fill the mind of man with aftonishment and bossess, occur in the history of the centuries under review, than in that of any period of the same extent in the annals of Europe. If we open the -history of Gregory of Levis, or of any contemporary author, we meet with a leries of social of cruelty, perfidy, and revenge, fo wild and enormous as almost to exceed belief.

Her, according to the objectation of an elegant and pro- From the hefound historian, there is an ultimate point of depression, as well is of exaltation, from which human affairs naturally return in a contrary progress, and beyond which they seldom pass either in their advancement or decline. When defects, prove. either in the form, or in the administration of government, occasion such disorders in society as are excessive and intolerable, it becomes the common interest to discover and to apply such remedies as will most effectually remove them. Slight inconveniencies may be long overlooked or endured, but when abuses grow to a certain pitch, the society must go to ruin, or must attempt to reform them. The disorders in the feudal system, together with the corruption of taste and manners consequent upon these, which had gone on increasing during a long course of years, feem to have attained their utmost point of excess towards the close of the eleventh century. From that ara, we may date the return of government and manners in a contrary direction, and can trace a fuccession of causes and events which contributed, some with a nearer and more powerful, others with a more remote and less perceptible influence, to abolish con-

ginning of the begin to im-

* Hume's History of England, vol. ii. p. 441.

fulion

SECT. I. fusion and barbarism, and to introduce order, regularity, and refinement.

Necessary point out the causes and events which contribute towards this improvement. In pointing out and explaining these causes and events, it is not necessary to observe the order of time with a chronological accuracy; it is of more importance to keep in view their mutual connection and dependance, and to show how the operation of one event, or of one cause, prepared the way for another, and augmented its influence. We have hitherto been contemplating the progress of that darkness which spread over Europe from its first approach, to the period of greatest obscuration; amore pleasant exercise begins here, to observe the first dawnings of returning light, to mark the various accessions by which it gradually increased and advanced towards the full splendor of day.

The tendency of the Crusades to introduce a change in government and manners.

The more remote causes of these expeditions.

I. THE Crusades, or expeditions in order to rescue the Holy Land out of the hands of Infidels, feem to be the first event that rouzed Europe from the lethargy in which it had been long funk, and that tended to introduce any change in government, or in manners. It is natural to the human mind to view those places which have been diffinguished by being the residence of any illustrious personage, or the scene of any great transaction. with fome degree of delight and veneration. From this principle flowed the superstitious devotion with which Christians, from the earliest ages of the church, were accustomed to visit that country which the Almighty had felected as the inheritance of his favourite people, and in which the fon of God had accomplished the redemption of mankind. As this distant pilgrimage could not be performed without confiderable expence, fatigue, and danger, it appeared the more meritorious, and came to be confidered as an expiation for almost every crime. opinion opinion which spread with rapidity over Europe about the close Secr. I. of the tenth and beginning of the eleventh century, and which gained universal credit, wonderfully augmented the number of these credulous privates and increased the ardour with which they undertook this tileses ways. The thousand years mentioned by St. John were impress to be accomplished, and the end of the world to be at head. A general confirmation feized mankind; many reinsmithed their possessions; and abasidening their friends and families, hurried with precipitation to see Holy Land, where they imagined that Christ would quickly against to judge the world . While Palestine continued subject to the Calipha, they had encouraged the resort of pilgrims to Jerusalem; and considered this as a beneficial species of commerce, which brought into their dominions gold and filver. and carried nothing out of them but relies and confecrated trin-But the Turks having conquered Syria about the middle of the eleventh century, pilgrims were exposed to outrages. of every kind from these sierce barbarians. This charge happening precifely at the juncture when the panic terror which I have mentioned rendered pilgrimages most frequent, filled Europe with alarm and indignation. Every person who returned from Palestine related the dangers which he had encountered, in vifiting the holy city, and described with exaggeration the cruelty and vexations of the Turks.

WHEN the minds of men were thus prepared, the zeal of a fanatical monk, who conceived the idea of leading all the forces

The immediate occasion of them.

¹ Revel. xx. 2, 3, 4.

^{*} Chronic. Will. Godelli ap. Bouquet Recueil des Historiens de France. tom. x. p. 262. Vita Abbonis, ibid. p. 332. Chronic. S. Pantaleonis ap. Eccard. Corp. Script. medii ævi, vol. i. p. 909. Annalista Saxo, ibid. 576.

SECT. L of Christendom against the infidels, and of driving them out of the Holy Land by violence, was sufficient to give a beginning to that wild enterprize. Peter thermit, for that was the name of this martial apostle, run from towince to province with a crucifix in his hand, exciting Princes and people to this Holy war, and wherever he came kindled the inne establishic ardour for it with which he himfelf was animated. The council of Placentia, where upwards of thirty thousand persons were affembled, pronounced the scheme to have been suggested by the immediate inspiration of heaven in the council of the report, fill more numerous, as fooms the meatine was purposed, all cried out with one voice, "It is the will of God." Persons of all ranks were fmitten with the contagion; not only the gallant nobles of that age, with their martial followers, whom the boldness of a romantic enterprize might have been apt to allure, but men in the more humble and pacific stations of life; ecclefiastics of every order, and even women and children engaged with emulation in an undertaking which was deemed facred and meritorious. If we may believe the concurring testimony of contemporary authors, fix millions of persons assumed the cross, which was the badge that distinguished such as devoted themselves to this holy warfare. All Europe, says the Princess Anna Comnena, torn up from the foundation, seemed ready to precipitate itself in one united body upon Asia '. Nor did the fumes of this enthusiastic zeal evaporate at once: the frenzy was as lasting, as it was extravagant. During two centuries, Europe seems to have had no object but to recover, y Alexias. lib. x. ap. Byz. fcript. vol. xi. p. 224.

^{*} Fulcherius Carnotensis ap. Bongarsii Gesta Dei per Francos, vol. i. 387. edit. Han. 1611.

STATE OF EUROPE

or keep possession of the Holy Land, and through that period, vast armies continued answerch thither [N].

THE SELECTION WHOSE spinnated by enthulialm were irrefiftible with the teller Alia, all Syria and Palestine were wrested from the insidels: the banner of the cross was displayed on Michigan Sion , Combantinople the capital of the Christian compressed the Rocks was saised by a body of these adventurers, Mahometans, and an Earl of policition of the Imperial throne during half a contury. But though the first impression of the Crusaders was to unexpected that they made their conquests with great case, they found infinite difficulty in present ving them. Establishments so distant from Europe, surrounded by warlike nations, animated with fanatical zeal fearce inferior. to that of the Crusaders themselves, were perpetually in danger, of being overturned. Before the expiration of the thirteenth A. D. 1201. century, the Christians were driven out of all their Asiatic posfessions, in acquiring of which incredible numbers of men had perished, and immense sums of money had been wasted. The only common enterprize in which the European nations ever engaged, and which all undertook with equal ardour, remains a fingular monument of human folly. 4

The fuccels of the Craindes.

But from these expeditions, extravagant as they were, be- Thebeneficial neficial consequences followed, which had neither been foreseen Crusades on nor expected. In their progress towards the Holy Land, the followers of the crofs marched through countries better culti-

effccts of the

INI NOTE XIII.

SECT. I. vated, and more civilized than their own. Their first rendezvous was commonly in Italy, in which Venice, Genoa, Pila and other cities had begun to apply themselves to competee, and had made fome advances towards wealth as well as infinement. They embarked there, and landing in Dalmatia, purfued their route by land to Constantinople. Though the military spirit had been long extinct in the eastern Empire, and a despotism of the worst species had annihilated almost every publick virtue, yet Conflantinople having never felt the destructive rage of the barbarous nations, was the greatest, as well as the most beautiful city in Europe, and the cally one in which there remained any image of the ancient elegance in manners, and arts. naval power of the eastern Empire was considerable. factures of the most curious fabrick were carried on in its dominions. Constantinople was the only mart in Europe for the commodities of the East Indies. Although the Saracens and Turks had torn from the Empire many of its richest provinces, and had reduced it within very narrow bounds, yet great wealth flowed into the capital from these various sources, which not only cherished such a taste for magnificence but kept alive such a relish for the sciences as appear considerable when compared with what was known in other parts of Europe. Even in Asia, the Europeans who had assumed the cross found the remains of the knowledge and arts which the example and encouragement of the Caliphs had diffused through their empire. Although the attention of the historians of the Cruzades was fixed on other objects than the state of fociety and manners among the nations which they invaded, although most of them had neither taste nor discernment enough to describe them, they relate, however, such signal acts of humanity and and generolity in the conduct of Saladia as well as finne other Sect leaders of the Mahometans, as dive us a very high face of their manners. It was not possible for the Crutaders to travel through fo many states, and to smold their various cultoms and infitutious without requiring information and improvement- Their views colleged a their prejudices wore off; new ideas crowded into their minds; and they must have been few fible on many occasions of the reshorty of their own manners when compared with these of a more polithed people. These imprellions were not to light as to be effected upon their return to their native countries. A close interpopure lublished between the East and West during two centuries; new armics were continually marching from Exercise Alia, while former adventurers returned home and imported many of the customs to which they had been familiarized by a long relidence alread. Accordingly, we discover, soon after the commencement of the Crusades, greater splendour in the courts of Princes, greater pomp in publick ceremonies, a more refined tafte in pleasure and amusements, together with a more romantic spirit of conterprize spreading gradually over Europe; and to these wild expeditions, the effect of superstition or folly, we owe the first gleams of light which tended to dispel barbarity and ignorance.

BUT these beneficial consequences of the Crusades took place flowly; their influence upon the state of property, and consequently of power, in the different kingdoms of Europe, was pertymore immediate as well as discernible. The nobles who assumed the cross, and bound themselves to march to the Holy Land, foon perceived that great sums were necessary towards defray-

Their influence on the state of pro-

SECT. I. ing the expences of such a distant expedition, and enabling them to appear with fuitable dignity at the head of their vaffals. But the genius of the feudal fystem was averse to the imposition of extraordinary taxes; and labjects in that age were unaccuftomed to pay them. No expedient remained for levying the fume requisite, but the fale of their possessons. As men were inflamed with romantic expectations of the splendid conquests which they hoped to make in Asia, and possessed with such zeal for recovering the Holy Land as swallowed up every other passion, they relinquished their ancient inheritances without any reluctance, and for prices far below their value, that they might fally forth as adventurers in quest of new settlements in unknown coun-The Monarchs of the different kingdoms, none of whom had engaged in the first Crusade, eagerly seized this opportunity of annexing confiderable territories to their crowns at fmall expence. Besides this, several great barons who perished in the Holy war, having left no heirs, their fiefs reverted of course to their respective sovereigns, and by these accessions of property as well as power taken from the one scale and thrown into the other, the regal authority increased in proportion as that of the Aristocracy declined. The absence, too, of many potent vastals, accustomed to controul and give law to their sovereigns, afforded them an opportunity of extending their prerogative, and of acquiring a degree of weight in the constitution which they did not formerly possess. To these circumstances, we may add, that as all who affumed the croft, were taken under the immediate protection of the church, and its heaviest anathemas were denounced against such as should disquiet or annoy these ^{*} Willelm. Malinsbur, Guibert. Abbas. ap. Bongars. vol. i. 481.

STATE OF EUROPE

who had devoted themselves to this service; the private quar- Secrirels and hostilities which bankbed transmillion from a feedal kingdom were fulpended or extinguillades a wore general and fleady administration is justice began to be introduced, and will the establishment of regular

THE commercial effects of the Sulades were not less com- Their comfiderable than those which I have already mentioned. first armies under the standard of the cross which Peter the hermit and Godfrey of Bonillon led through Germany and Hungary to Constantinople, suffered to much by the length of the march, as well as the figuracis of the barbarous people who inhabited those countries, that it deterred others from taking the fame route; so that rather than encounter so many dangers, they chose to go by sea. Venice, Genoa, and Pila furnished the transports on which they embarked. The sum which these cities received merely for freight from such numerous armics was immense. This, however, was but a finall part of what they gained by the expeditions to the Holy Land; the Crufaders contracted with them, for military stores and provisions; their fleets kept on the coast as the army advanced by land; and supplying them with whatever was wanting, engrossed all the profits of that lucrative branch of commerce. The fuccess which attended the arms of the Crusaders was productive of advantages still more permanent. There are charters yet extant, Du Cange Glossar. voc. Cruce signatus. Guil. Abbas ap. Bongars. vol. i. 480, 482.

[[]O] NOTE XIV.

Muratori Antiquit. Italic. medii. zvi, vol. ii. 905.

SECT. I. containing grants to the Venetians, Pilans, and Genoele of the most extensive immunities in the several settlements which the Christians made in Asia. All the commodities which they imported or exported are thereby exempted from every imposition; the property of entire full in tome of the marijune towns, and of large fireers and house in others, is we feed in these; and all questions arising among persons settled within their precincts, or who traded under their projection, are appointed to be tried by their own laws and by judges of their own appointment . When the Crusaders seized Constantinople, and placed one of their own number on the Imperial throne, the Italian States were likewise gainers by that event. The Venetians who had planned the enterprize, and took a confiderable part in carrying it into execution, did not neglect to secure to themselves the chief advantages redounding from its success. They made themselves masters of part of the ancient Peleponnesus in Greece, together with some of the most fertile islands in the Archipelago. Many valuable branches of the commerce, which formerly centered in Constantinople, were transferred to Venice, Genca, or Pifa. Thus a fuccession of events occasioned by the Holy war, opened various fources, from which wealth flowed in such abundance into these cities, as enabled them, in concurrence with another inflitution which shall be immediately mentioned, to secure their own liberty and independance.

The estab'ishment of communities favourable to government and order.

II. THE institution to which I alluded was the forming of cities into communities, corporations, or bodies politick, and granting them the privilege of municipal jurisdiction, which

Murat. ibid. 906, &c.

f Villchardouin hist. de Constant. sous l'Empereurs François, 105, &c. contributed contributed more, perhaps, than any other cause to intro- Secr. duce regular government, police and arra, and to diffuse them over Europe. The feudal government had degenerated into a fysics of oppression. The userpanions of the nobles were beone unbounded and uncorresple: they had reduced the great body of the people into a same of actual tervicude: the condition of those dignified with the name of freemen, was often little preferable to that of the other. Mor was such apprellion the portion of those alone who dwelt in the country, and were employed in cultivating the estate of their master. The cities and villages The enciene held of some great lord, on whom they depended for protection, and were no less subject to his arbitrary jurisdiction. The inhabitants were deprived of the natural, and most unalienable rights of humanity. They could not dispose of the effects which their own industry had acquired, either by a latter will, or by any deed executed during their life. They had no right to appoint guardians for their children, during their minority. They were not permitted to marry without purchasing the consent of the lord on whom they depended b. If once they had commenced a law fuit, they durst not terminate it by an accommodation, because that would have deprived the lord in whose court they pleaded, of the perquisites due to him on passing sentence. Services of various kinds, no less diferaceful than oppressive, were exacted from them without mercy or moderation. The spirit of industry was choaked in fome cities by abfurd regulations, and in others by unreasonable

Dacherii Spiceleg. tom. xi. 374, 375. edit. in 4to. Ordonances des Rois de France, tom. iii. 204. No. 2. 6.

Dordonances des Rois de France, tom. i. p. 22. tom. iii. 203. No. 1. Murat. Antiq. Ital. vol. iv. p. 20. Dacher. Spicel. vol. xi. 325, 341.

¹ Dacher, Spicel. vol. ix. 182.

SECT. I. exactions: nor would the narrow and oppressive maxims of a military aristocracy have permitted it ever to rise to any degree of height or vigour *.

The freedom of cities first established in Italy.

BUT as foon as the cities of Italy here to turn their attention towards commerce, and to some itea of the advantages which they might derive from it, they became impatient to shake off the voice of their infolent lords, and to establish among themselves such a free and equal government as would render property fecure, and incustry flourishing. The German Emperors, especially those of the Franconian and Suabian lines, as the feat of their government was far distant from Italy, possessed a feeble and imperfect jurisdiction in that country. Their perpetual quarrels either with the Popes or with their own turbulent vallals diverted their attention from the interior police of Italy, and gave constant employment to their arms. These circumstances encouraged the inhabitants of some of the Italian cities, towards the beginning of the eleventh century, to assume new privileges, to unite together more closely, and to form themselves into bodies politick governed by laws established by common consent'. The rights, which many cities acquired by bold or fortunate usurpations, others purchased from the Emperors, who deemed themselves gainers when they received large sums for immunities which they were no longer able to withhold; and fome cities obtained them gratuitously from the generosity or facility of the Princes on whom they depended. The great increase of wealth which the Crusades brought into Italy, occafioned a new kind of fermentation and activity in the minds of the people, and excited such a general passion for liberty and independance, that before the conclusion of the last Crusade all the confiderable cities in that country had either purchased or had express large immunities drives the Emperors [P].

k M. l'Abbè Mably observat. sur l'hist. de France, tom. ii. p. 2. 96.

Murat. antiquit. Ital. vol. iv. p. 5.

This innovation was not long known in Italy before it made Is introduced its way into France. Louis the Gross, in order to create some and into other power that might counterbalance those potent vassals who controuled, or gave law to the crown, first adopted the plan of A. D. 1108 conferring new privileges on the towns fituated within his own These privileges were called charters of community, by which he enfranchised the inhabitants, abolished all marks of servitude, and formed them into corporations or bodies politick, to be governed by a council and magistrates of their own nomination. These magistrates had the right of administring justice within their own precincts, of levying taxes, of embodying and training to arms the militia of the town, which took the field when required by the fovereign, under the command of officers appointed by the community. The great barons imitated the example of their monarch, and granted like immunities to the towns within their territorics. They had wasted such great sums in their expeditions to the Holy Land, that they were eager to lay hold on this new expedient for raifing money, by the fale of these charters of liberty. Though the institution of communities was as repugnant to their maxims of policy, as it was adverse to their power, they difregarded remote confequences, in order to obtain present relief. In less than two centuries servitude was abolished in most of the towns in France, and they became free corporations, instead of dependant villages without juris-into France countries of Europe.

IPI NOTE XV.

SECT. I. diction or privileges [Q]. Much about the same period, the great cities in Germany began to acquire like immunities, and laid the foundation of their present liberty and independance [R]. The practice spread quickly over Large and was adopted in Germany, Spain, England. School, and all the other shall kingdoms [S].

Its happy effects upon the condition of the inhabitauts;

The good effects of this new infitution were immediately felt, and its influence on government as well as manners was no less extensive than salutary. A great body of the people was released from servitude, and from all the arbitrary and grievous impositions to which that wretched condition had subjected them. Towns, upon acquiring the right of community, became so many little republicks, governed by known and equal laws; and liberty was deemed such an essential and characteristic part in their constitution, that if any slave took refuge in one of them, and resided there during a year without being claimed, he was instantly declared a freeman, and admitted as a member of the community.

Upon the power of the nebility;

As one part of the people owed their liberty to the erection of communities, another was indebted to them for their fecurity. Such had been the state of Europe during several centuries, that self-preservation obliged every man to court the patronage of some powerful baron, and in times of danger his castle was the place to which all resorted for safety. But towns surrounded with walls, whose inhabitants were regularly trained to arms, and bound by interest, as well as by the most solemn engagements, reciprocally to desend each other, afforded a more commodious and secure retreat. The nobles began to be considered as of less importance, when they ceased to be the sale grantisms to whom the people could look to some more than against violence.

[Q] NOTE XVI. [R] NOTE XVII. [S] NOTE XVIII. Statut. Humberti Bellojoci Dacher. Spicel. vol. ix. 182, 185. Charta Comit. Forens. ibid. 193.

SECT. L.

IF the nobility fuffered land themselves of their credit and power by the privileges granted at the cities, the crown acquired an increase of both. As there were no regular troops kept on foot in any of the feudal kingdoms, the Monarch could bring no army into the field but what was composed of soldiers furnished by the crown-vassals, always jealous of the regal authority, and often in rebellion against it; nor had he any funds for carrying on the publick fervice, but fuch as they granted him with a very sparing hand. But when the members of communities were permitted to bear arms, and were trained to the use of these, this in some degree supplied the first defect, and give the crown the command of a body of men independent of its The attachment of the cities to their fovereigns, great vassals. whom they respected as the first authors of their liberties, and whom they were obliged to court as the protectors of their immunities against the domineering spirit of the nobles, contributed fomewhat towards removing the second evil, as it frequently engaged them to grant the crown fuch supplies of money as added new force to government '.

Upon the 's power of the crown;

THE acquisition of liberty made such a happy change in the condition of all the members of communities, as routed them

Upon the increase of industry.

Ordon. des Rois de France, tom. i. 602, 785. tom. ii. 318. 422.

SECT. I. from that stupidity and inaction into which they had been sunk by the wretchedness of their former state. The spirit of industry revived. Commerce became an object of attention, and began to flourish. Population increased. Independance was established; and wealth nowed into cities which had long-been the feat of poverty and oppression. Wealth was accompanied by its usual attendants, oftentation and luxury, and though the former was inelegant, and comberforme, and the latter indelicate, they led gradually to greater refinement in manners, and in the habits of life. Together with this improvement in manners, a more regular species of government and police was introduced. As cities grew to be more populous, and the occasions of intercourse among men increased, statutes and regulations multiplied of course, and all became sensible that their common fafety depended on observing them with exactness, and on punishing such as violated them, with promptitude and rigour. Laws and subordination, as well as polished manners, took their rise in cities, and diffused themselves insenfibly through the rest of the society.

The inhabitants of cities acquire political power as members of the conslitution. III. The inhabitants of cities having obtained personal freedom and municipal jurisdiction, soon acquired civil liberty and political power. It was a fundamental principle in the feudal system of policy, that no freeman could be governed or taxed unless by his own consent. In consequence of this, the vassals of every baron were called to his court, in which they established by mutual consent such regulations as they deemed most beneficial to their small society, and granted their superior such supplies of money as were proportional to their abilities, or to his wants. The barons themselves, conformably to the same maxim, were admitted mitted into the supreme assembly of the nation, and concurred SECT with the fovereign in enacting laws, or in imposing taxes. As the superior lord, according to the original plan of foudal policy, retained the direct property of those lands which he gramed in temporary publishes to his vallals, the law, even fter fiefs became herodisary. Mil supposed this original practice to sublist, and a baron commenced to be considered as the guardian of all who relided within his territories. The great council of each nation, whether distinguished by the name of a parliament, a diet, the Cortes, or the states general, was composed entirely of fuch barons, and dignified ecclefiafticks, as held immediately of the crown. Towns, whether lituated within the royal domaine, or on the lands of a subject, depended for protection on the lord of whom they held. They had no legal name, no political existence, which could entitle them to be admitted into the legislative affembly, or could give them any authority there. But as foon as they were enfranchised, and formed into Bodies Corporate, they became legal and independent members of the constitution, and acquired all the rights essential to freemen. Amongst these, the most valuable, was the privilege of a decifive voice in enacting laws, and in granting subsidies. It was natural for cities, accustomed to a form of municipal government, according to which no regulation could be established, and no money could be raifed without their own confent, to claim this privilege. The wealth, the power and confideration which they acquired on recovering their liberty added weight to their claim; and favourable events happened, or fortunate conjunctures occurred in the different kingdoms of Europe, which facilitated or forwarded their obtaining possession of this important right. In England, one of the first countries in which

SECT. I. which the representatives of boroughs were admitted into the great council of the nation, the barons who took arms against Henry III. fummoned them to attend parliament in order to add greater popularity to their party, and to strengthen thebarrier against the encroachment of regal power. In France, Philip the Fair, a Monarch no left digacious than enterprizing, confidered them as infigurates which might be employed with equal advantage to extend the royal prerogative, to counterbalance the exorbitant power of the robles, and to facilitate the imposition of new taxes. With these views, he introduced the deputies of fuch towns as were formed into communities into the states general of the nation'. In the Empire, the wealth and immunities of the Imperial cities placed them on a level with the most considerable members of the Germanic body. Confcious of their own power and dignity, they pretended to the privilege of forming a separate bench in the diet; and made good their pretention '.

A. D. 1293.

The happy effects of this upon government.

But in what way soever the representatives of cities first gained a place in the legislature, that event had great influence on the form and genius of government. It tempered the rigour of aristocratical oppression, with a proper mixture of popular liberty: It secured to the great body of the people, who had formerly no reprefentatives, active and powerful guardians of their rights and privileges: It chablished an intermediate power between the King and nobles, to which each had recourse alternately, and which at fome times opposed the usurpations of the former, on other occasions checked the encroachments of the latter. As foon as the representatives of communities gained. any degree of credit and influence in the legislature, the ipirit - of laws became different from what it had formerly been 1 it flowed from new principles; it was directed towards new objects ? equality, wider, the number good, and the redress of grievaness; were phrases and ideas moneta into the and which grew to be familiar in the flatutes and purifyrance of the European nations. Almost all the efforts in fevour of liberty in every country of Lurope have been made by this new power in the legisl ture. In proportion as it rose to consideration and influence, the severity of the aristocratical spirit decreased; and the privileges of the people became gradually more extensive as the ancient and exorbitant jurisdiction of the nobles was abridged [T].

Pasquier Recherches de la France, p. 81. edit. Par. 1633.

Pfefiel Abrege de l'histoire & droit d'Allemagne, p. 408. 451.

STATE OF EUROPE.

IV. THE inhabitants of towns having been declared free The records by the charters of communities, that part of the people which refided in the country, and was employed in agriculture, began to recover liberty by enfranchisement. During the rigour of feudal government, as hath been already observed, the great body of the lower people was reduced They were flaves fixed to the foil which they to fervitude. cultivated, and together with it were transferred from one proprietor to another, by fale, or by conveyance. spirit of feudal policy did not favour the enfranchisement of that order of men. It was an established maxim that no vassal could legally diminish the value of a fief, to the detriment of the lord from whom he had received it. In consequence of this, manumission by the authority of the immediate master was not valid; and unless it was confirmed by the superior lord of whom

SECT. I. he held, flaves of this species did not acquire a compleat right to their liberty. Thus it became necessary to ascend through all the gradations of feudal holding to the King, the lord Paramount. A form of procedure so tedious and troublesome discouraged the practice of manumission. Bomestic or personal slaves often obtained liberty from the humanity or beneficence of their masters, to whom they belonged in absolute property. The condition of slaves fixed to the soil was much more unalterable.

The motives and progress of this.

But the freedom and independance which one part of the people had obtained by the institution of communities, inspired the other with the most ardent desire of acquiring the same privileges; and their fuperiors, scnfible of the benefits which they themselves had derived from former concessions, were less unwilling to gratify them by the grant of new immunities. The enfranchisement of slaves became more frequent; and the Monarchs of France, prompted by necessity, no less than by their inclination to reduce the power of the nobles, endeavoured to render it general. Louis X. and his brother Philip issued ordinances, declaring, "That as all men were by nature freeborn, and as their kingdom was called the kingdom of Franks, they determined that it should be so in reality as well as in name; therefore they appointed that enfranchisements should be granted throughout the whole kingdom, upon just and reasonable conditions "." These edicts were carried into immediate execution within the royal domaine. The example of their fovereigns. together with the expectation of the confiderable fums which

A. D. 1315. and 1318.

^{*} I tablissemens de St. Louis, liv. ii. ch. 34. Ordon. tom. i. 283. not. (a).

r Ordon, tom, i. p. 583, 653.

STATE OF EUROPE.

they might raise by this expedient, led many of the nobles to set Secr. their dependants at liberty; and fervitude was gradually abolished in almost every province of the kingdom [4] in Italy, the establishment of republican government in their great cities, the genius and maximum sales, where exprenely different from those of the feudal policy, to paint with the edges of equality which the progress of commorce had removed frameway gradually introduced the practice of enfranching the antient predial flaves. In fome provinces of Germany, the persons who had been subject to this species of bondage, were released; in others, the rigour of their state was mitigated. In England, as the spirit of liberty. gained ground, the very name and idea of personal servitude, without any formal interpolition of the legislature to prohibit it, was totally banished.

THE effects of such a remarkable change in the condition of The effects of fo great a part of the people, could not fail of being confidence ble and extensive. The husbandman, master of his own industry. and fecure of reaping for himself the fruits of his labour, became. the farmer of the same fields where he had formerly been compelled to toil for the benefit of another. The odious names of master and of slave, the most mortifying and depressing of all distinctions to human nature, were abolished. New prospects opened, and new incitements to ingenuity and enterprize presented themselves, to those who were emancipated. The expectation of bettering their fortune, as well as that of raifing themselves to a more honourable condition, concurred in calling forth their activity and genius; and a numerous class of men, who formerly had no political existence, and were employed merely as instruments of labour, became useful citizens, and contributed towards augmenting the force or riches of the society, which adopted them as members.

[U] NOTE XX.

SECT. I.

The introduction of a more regular administration of justice, contributes to the improvement of society.

V. THE various cancillate which were employed in order to introduce a more regular, agail, and vigorous administration of inflice, contributed greatly towards the improvement of lociety. What was the particular mode of dispensing justice in the several barbarous nations which over-ran the Roman Empire, and took possession of its different provinces, cannot now be determined with certainty. We may conclude from the form of government established among them, as well as from their ideas concerning the nature of fociety, that the authority of the magistrate was extremely limited, and the independence of individuals proportionally great. History and records, as far as they reach back, justify this conclusion, and represent the ideas and exercise of justice in all the countries of Europe, as little different from those which must take place in a state of nature. To maintain the order and tranquillity of fociety by the regular execution of known laws; to inflict vengeance on crimes defirutive of the peace and fafety of individuals, by a profecution carried on in the name, and by the authority of the community: to consider the punishment of criminals as a public example to deter others from violating the laws; were objects of government little understood in theory, and less regarded in practice. The magistrate could scarce be said to hold the sword of justice: it was left in the hands of private persons. Resentment was almost the sole motive for profecuting crimes; and to gratify that passion, was the end and rule in punishing them. He who suffered the wrong, was the only person who had a right to purfue the aggressor, and to exact or to remit the punishment From a system of judicial procedure, so crude and defective as feems to be fearce compatible with the subfidence of civil fociety. disorder and anarchy flowed. Superfiction concurred with ship ignorance concerning the statute of government, in obliniting the administration of plants of in addition in a conficience and unequal. To provide amortion for their state, to as to give a more acquier south to galler, were density several centuries, one great object of political matters. The regulations for this purpole, may be reduced to three gracial heads: To emplain thele, and to point out the manner in which they operated it an important article in the history of dociety among the nations of Europe.

STATE OF EUROPE

11. THE first considerable step towards establishing an equal This effected administration of justice, was the abolishment of the right which individuals claimed of waging war with each other, in their own name, and by their own authority. To repel injuries, and to revenge wrongs, is no less natural to man than to cultivate friendship; and while society remains in its most simple state, Original the former is considered as a personal right no less unalienable than the latter. Nor do men in this fituation deem that they justice. have a title to redress their own wrongs alone; they are touched with the injuries of those with whom they are connected, or in whose honour they are interested; and are no less prompt to The favage, how imperfectly foever he may avenge them. comprehend the principles of political union, feels warmly the fentiments of locial affection, and the obligations arising from the ties of blood. On the appearance of an injury or affront offered to his family or tribe, he kindles into rage, and pursues the authors of it with the keenest resentment. He considers it by abolishing the practice of private ideas of men concerning

A VIEW OF THE

SECT. I. as cowardly to expect redress from any arm but his own, and asinfamous to give up to another the right of determining what reparation he should accept, or with what vengeance he should rest fatisfied.

These lead to the practice of private war.

THE maxime and practice of all uncivilized nations, with respect to the prosecution and punishment of offenders, particularly those of the ancient Germans, and other Barbarians who invaded the Roman Empire, are perfectly conformable to these ideas. While they retained their native simplicity of manners, and continued to be divided into small tribes or societies, the defects in this imperfect system of criminal jurisprudence (if it merits that name) were less sensibly felt. When they came to fettle in the extensive provinces which they had conquered, and to form themselves into great monarchies; when new objects of ambition prefenting themselves, increased both the number and the violence of their diffensions, they ought to have adopted new maxims concerning the redress of injuries, and to have regulated by general and equal laws, that which they formerly left to be directed by the caprice of private passion. But sierce and haughty chieftains, accustomed to avenge themselves on such as had injured them, did not think of relinquishing a right which they confidered as a privilege of their order, and a mark of their independance. Laws enforced by the authority of Princes and Magistrates who possessed little power, commanded no great degree of reverence. The administration of justice among rude illiterate people, was not so accurate or decisive, or uniform, as to induce men to fubmit implicitly to its determinations. Every offended baron buckled on his armour, and fought ^{*} Tacit. de Mor. German. cap. 21. Vell. Paterc. lib. ii. c. 118.

STATE OF EUROPE.

redress at the head of his vassals. His adversary met him in like hostile array. Neither of them appealed to impotent laws which could afford them no protection. Neither of them would submit points, in which their passactions were warmly interested, to the flow determinations of a passaction were warmly interested, to their swords for the latest and dependents of the agreement of the passaction as were involved in the quarrent. Shery has not even the liberty of remaining neutral. Such as refused to act in concert with the party to which they belonged, were not only exposed to infamy, but subjected to legal penalties.

Sect. I

The different kingdoms of Europe were torn and afflicted, during several centuries, by intestine wars, excited by private of animolities, and carried on with all the rage natural to men of sierce manners, and of violent passions. The estate of every baron was a kind of independent territory, disjoined from those around it, and the hostilities between them were perpetual. The evil became so inveterate and deep-rooted, that the form and laws of private war were ascertained, and regulations concerning it made a part in the system of jurisprudence, in the same manner as if this practice had been founded in some natural right of humanity, or in the original constitution of civil so-ciety.

The pernicious effects

So great was the disorder, and such the calamities which these perpetual hostilities occasioned, that various efforts were made to wrest from the nobles this pernicious privilege which Various methods emplayed in or er to abolifi its.

they

^b Beaumanoir Coustumes de Beauvoisis, ch. 59, et les notes de Thaumassiere, P: 447.

SECT. I. they claimed. It was the interest of every fovereign to abolish a practice which almost annihilated his authority. Chanlemagne prohibited it by an express law, as an invention of the devil to defiroy the order and happiness of society s, but the reign of one Monarch, however visitions and active, was too illust to certificate a custom to state a custom to state the custom the form of the prohibition, his totale the custom during the prohibition, his totale the custom during more than to apply publishing. "They declared it anisotial for very person to commence war, until he had sent a formal defience to the kindred and dependents of his advertary; they ordained that, after the commission of the traspass or crime which gave rife to a private war, forty days must elapse before the person injured should attack the vallets of his adversary; they enjoined all persons to suspend their private animosities, and to ceafe from hostilities when the King was engaged in any war against the enemies of the nation. The church co-operated with the civil magistrate, and interposed its authority in order to extirpate a practice fo repugnant to the spirit of Christianity. Various councils issued decrees, prohibiting all private wars; and denounced the heaviest anathemas against such as should disturb the tranquillity of fociety, by claiming or exercising that barbarous right. The aid of religion was called in to combat and subdue the ferocity of the times. The Almighty was said to have manifested, by visions and revelations to different perfons, his disapprobation of that spirit of revenge, which armed one part of his creatures against the other. Men were required, in the name of God, to sheath their swords, and to remember the facred ties which united them as Christians, and as members of the same society. But this junction of civil and ecclesiastic authority, though strengthened by every thing most apt to alarm SECT. and to over-awe the credulous spirit of those ages, produced no other effect than some temporary suspensions of hostilities, and a cellation from war on certain days and feafons confecrated to the more folemn acts of devotion. The mobies continued to affert this dangerous privately dangerous privately dangerous from of the laws calculated to amount or carcumstribe it; they eluded others; they petitioned; they remontisated; they flruggled for the right of private war as the highest and most honourable distinction of their order. Even so late as the fourteenth century, we find the nobles in feveral provinces of France contending for their ancient method of terminating their differences by the fword, in preference to that of submitting them to the decifion of any judge. The final abolition of this practice in that kingdom, and the other countries in which it prevailed, is not tobe ascribed so much to the force of statutes and decrees, as to the gradual increase of the royal authority, and to the imperceptible progress of juster sentiments concerning government, order, and public fecurity [X].

Capitul. A. D. 801. Edit. Baluz. Vol. i. p. 371.

2. The prohibition of the form of trial by judicial combat, was another confiderable step towards the introduction of such regular government as secured publick order and private tranquillity. As the right of private war left many of the quarrels among individuals to be decided, like those between nations, by arms; the form of trial by judicial combat, which was established in every country of Europe, banished equity from courts of justice, and rendered chance or force the arbiter of their determinations. In civilized nations, all transactions of any impor-

The prohibition of trial by judicial combat, another improvement in the administration of justice.

[X] NOTE XXI.

Defects in the judicial proeccdings of the middle Ages.

SECT. I. tance are concluded in writing. The exhibition of the deed or instrument is full evidence of the fact, and ascertains with precision what each party has stipulated to perform. But among a rude people, when the arts of reading and writing were fuch uncommon attainments, that to be maller of either, intitled a person to the appellation of a clerk or learned man, scarce any thing was committed to writing but treaties between Princes, their grants and charters to their subjects, or such transactions between private parties as were of extraordinary confequence, or had an extensive effect. The greater part of affairs in common life and business were carried on by verbal contracts or promises. This, in many civil questions, not only made it difficult to bring proof sufficient to establish any claim, but encouraged falsehood and fraud, by rendering them extremely easy. in criminal cases, where a particular fact must be ascertained, or an accusation be disproved, the nature and effect of legal evidence was little understood by barbarous nations. To define with accuracy that species of evidence which a court had reason to expect; to determine when it ought to infift on positive proof, and when it should be satisfied with a proof from circumstances: to compare the testimony of discordant witnesses; and to fix the degree of credit due to each; were discussions too intricate and fubtile for the jurisprudence of ignorant ages. In order to avoid encumbering themselves with these, a more simple form of procedure was introduced into courts as well civil as criminal. In all cases, where the notoriety of the fact did not furnish the clearest and most direct evidence, the person accused, or he against whom an action was brought, was called legally, or offered volunta-tily to purge himself by oath; and upon his declaring his inno- SECT. cence, he was inflantly acquitted. This abourd practice effectually screened guilt and fraud from detection or punishment, by rendering the temptation to perpury to powerful, that it was not cary in reliable. The marricious effects of it were fenfibly felt; and in the ward against them, the laws ordained that oaths thereof be administered with great folemaity, and accompanied with every circumstance which could infpire religious reverence, or superstitious terror . This, however, proved a feeble remedy: these ceremonious rites became familiar, and their impression on the imagination gradually diminished; men who could venture to disregard truth, were not art to flartle at the solemnities of an oath. Their observation of this, put legislators upon devising a new expedient for rendering the purgation by oath more certain and fatisfactory. They required the person accused to appear with a certain number of freemen, his neighbours or relations, who corroborated the oath which he took, by fwearing that they believed all that he had uttered to be true. These were called Compurgators, and their number varied according to the importance of the fubject in dispute, or the nature of the crime with which a person was In fome cases, the concurrence of no less than charged s. three hundred of these auxiliary witnesses was requisite to acquit the person accused. But even this device was found to be ineffectual. It was a point of honour with every man in Europe, during several ages, not to desert the chief on whom he depended, ^{*} Leg. Burgund. Tit. 8, & 45. Leg. Aleman. Tit. 89. Leg. Beiwar. Tit 8. § 5. 2. &c. f Du Cange Gloffar. voc. Justamenton, vol. iii. p. 1607. Edit. Benedict.

* Du Cange, abid. vol. iii. p. 1509. f Spelagan Gloffar. voc. Affath. Gregor. Turon. Hift. lib. viii. c. 9.

SECT. I. and to fland by those with whom the ties of blood connected: him. Whoever then was bold enough to violate the laws, was fure of devoted adherents, willing to abet, and eager to serve him in whatever manner he required. The formality of calling Compurgators, proved an apparent, not a real fecurity, against falsehood and perjury; and the sentences of courts, while they continued to refer every point in question to the oath of the defendant, became so flagrantly iniquitous as excited universal indignation against this method of procedure.

These introduced the practice of appealing to heaven :

SENSIBLE of these defects, but strangers to the manner of correcting them, or of introducing a more proper form, our anceftors, as an infallible method of discovering truth, and of guarding against deception, appealed to Heaven, and referred every point in dispute to be determined, as they imagined, by the decisions of unerring wildom and impartial justice. The person accused, in order to prove his innocence, submitted, in some cases, to trial, by plunging his arm in boiling water; by lifting a red-hot iron with his naked hand; by walking bare-foot over burning plough-shares; or by other experiments equally perilous and formidable. other occasions, he challenged his accuser to fight him in fingle combat. All these various forms of trial were conducted with many devout ceremonies; the ministers of religion were emsployed, the Almighty was called upon to interpose for the maniteflation of guilt, and for the protection of innocence; and who ever escaped unhart, or came off victorious, was pronounced to be acquitted by the Judgment of God *.

Particularly. by judicial combat.

¹ Leg. Langobard. lib. ii. tit. 55. § 34.

k Murat. Differtatio de judiciis Dei. Antiquit. Italic. vol. iii. p. 612.

Among all the whimfical and abfurd inflitutions which owe Sect. L. their existence to the weakness of human reason, this, which fubmitted questions that affected the property, the reputation, and the lives of men, to the determination of chance, or of bodily firength and address, appears to be the most extravagant and prepolierous. There were circumstances, however, which led the nations of Europe to confider this equivocal mode of deciding any point in contest, as a direct appeal to heaven, and a certain method of discovering its will. As men are unable to comprehend the manner in which the Almighty carries on the government of the universe, by equal, fixed, and general laws, they are apt to imagine that in every case which their passions or interest render important in their own cyes, the Supreme Ruler of all ought visibly to display his power, in vindicating innocence and punishing vice. It requires no inconsiderable degree of science and philosophy to correct this popular error. But the sentiments prevalent in Europe during the dark ages, instead of correcting, strengthened it. Religion, for several centuries, confifted chiefly in believing the legendary history of those faints whose names crowd and disgrace the Romish calendar. The fabulous tales concerning their miracles, had been declared authentic by the bulls of Popes, and the decrees of councils; they made the great subject of the instructions which the clergy offered to the people, and were received by them with implicit credulity and admiration. By thefe, men were accustomed to believe that the established laws of nature might be violated on the most frivolous occasions, and were taught to look rather for particular and extraordinary acts of power under the divine administration, than to contemplate the regular progress and execution of a general plan. One superstition prepared the way for another; and whoever believed that the Supreme Being had the supersti.

The introduction of this practice favoured by

middle ages.

tion of the inter-

SECT. It interposed miraculously on those trivial occasions mentioned in legends, could not but expect his intervention in matters of greater importance, when foleranly referred to his decision.

And likewife by their martial spirit.

WITH this superfluious opinion, the martial spirit of Europe, during the middle ages, concurred in establishing the mode of trial by judicial combat. To be ready to maintain with his fword whatever his lips had uttered, was the first maxim of honour with every gentleman. To affert their own rights by force of arms, to inflict vengeance on those who had injured or affronted them, were the distinction and pride of high-spirited nobles. The form of trial by combat coinciding with this maxim, flattered and gratified these passions. Every man was the guardian of his own honour, and of his own life; the justice of his cause, as well as his future reputation, depended on his own courage and prowefs. This mode of decifion was confidered, accordingly, as one of the happiest efforts of wife policy; and as foon as it was introduced, all the forms of trial by fire or water, and other superstitious experiments, fell into difuse, or were employed only in controversics between persons of inferior rank. The trial by combat was authorized over all Europe, and received in every country with equal fatiffaction. Not only questions concerning uncertain or contested facts, but general and abstract points in law were determined by the issue of a combat; and the latter was deemed a method of discovering truth more liberal as well as more fatisfactory, than that by examination and argument. Not only might parties, whose minds were exasperated by the eagerness and the hostility of oppolition, defy their antagonist, and require him to make good his charge, or to prove his innocence, with his sword; but wit- Sect. I nesses, who had no interest in the issue of the question, though called to declare the truth by laws which our it to have afforded them protection, were equally exposed to the danger of a challenge, and equally bound to affect the remain of their evidence by dint of arms. To complete the sometimes of this military jurispredence, even the character of a judge was not facred from its violence. Any one of the parties might interrupt a judge when about to deliver his opinion; might accuse him of iniquity and corruption in the most reproachful terms, and throwing down his gauntlet, might challenge him to defend his integrity in the field; nor could he, without infamy, refuse to accept the defiance, or decline to enter the lifts against such an adversary.

Thus the form of trial by combat, like other abuses, spread It becomes gradually, and extended to all persons and limost to all cases. Ecclefiaftics, women, minors, superannuated and infirm persons, who could not with decency or justice be compelled to take arms, and to maintain their own cause, were obliged to produce champions, whom they engaged by affection or rewards, to fight their battles. The folemnities of a judicial combat were such as were natural in an action, which was confidered both as a formal appeal to God, and as the final decision of questions of the highest moment. Every circumstance relating to them was regulated by the edicts of Princes, and explained in the comments of lawyers, with a minute and even superstitious accu-Skill in these laws and rites was the only science of which warlike nobles boasted, or which they were ambitious to attain'.

1 See a curious discourse concerning the laws of judicial combat, by Thomas of Woodflock, Duke of Gloucester, uncle to Richard II. in Spelman's Glossar. voc. Campus.

The pernicious effects

By this barbarous custom the natural course of proceeding, both in civil and criminal questions, was entirely perverted. Force usurped the place of equity in courts of judicature, and inflice was banished from her proper mansion. Discernment, learning integrity, were qualities less necessary to a judge than bodily thrength, and dexterity in the use of arms. Daring courage, and superior vigour or address, were of more moment towards fecuring the favourable iffue of a fuit, than the equity of a cause, or the clearness of the evidence. Men, of course, applied themselves to cultivate the talents which they found to be of greatest utility. As strength of body and address in arms were no less requisite in those lists which they were obliged to enter in defence of their private rights, than in the field of battle, where they met the enemies of their country, the great object of education, it became the chief employment in life, as well as to acquire these martial accomplishments. The administration of justice, instead of accustoming men to listen to the voice of equity, or to reverence the decisions of law, added to the ferocity of their manners, and taught them to confider force as the great arbiter of right and wrong.

Various expedients for abolishing this practice. THESE pernicious effects of the trial by combat were so obvious, that they did not altogether escape the view of the unobserving age in which it was introduced. The clergy, from the beginning, remonstrated against it as repugnant to the spirit of Christianity, and subversive of justice and order. But the maxims and passions which savoured it, had taken such hold of the minds of men, that they disregarded admonitions and cen-

Du Cange Glossar. voc. Duellum, vol. ii. p. 1675.

fures, which, on other occasions, would have fruck them with SECT. terror. The evil was too great and inveterate to yield to that remedy, and continuing to increase, the civil power at length found it necessary to interpose. Conscious, however, of their own limited authority, monarche proceeded with caution, and their first attempts to restrain, or to be my bounds to this practice. were extremely feeble. One of the partieft restrictions of this practice which occurs in the inflorm of Europe, is that of Henry I. of England. It extended no farther than to prohibit the trial by combat in questions concerning property of fmall value". Louis VII. of France imitated his example, and iffued an edict to the same effect. St. Louis, whose ideas as a legislator, were far superior to those of his age, endeavoured tointroduce a more perfect jurifprindence, and to substitute the trial. by evidence, in place of that by combat. But his regulations, with respect to this, were confined to his own domains; for the great vallals of the crown, possessed such independant authority, and were fo fondly attached to the ancient practice, that he durft not venture to extend it to the whole kingdom. Some barons voluntarily adopted his regulations. The spirit of courts of justice became averse to the mode of decision by combat, and discouraged it on every occasion. The nobles, nevertheless, thought it so honourable to depend for the security of their lives and fortunes on their own courage alone, and contended with so much vehemence for the preservation of this favourite privilege of their order, that the fueceffors of St. Louis, unable to oppofe, and afraid of offending fuch powerful fubjects, were obliged not only to tolerate, but to authorize the practice which

^{*} Brussel Usage des Fiefs. vol. ii. p. 962.

Ordon, tom i. p. 16.

SECT. I. he had attempted to abolish?. In other countries of Europe, efforts equally zealous were employed to maintain the established custom; and fimilar concessions were extorted from their respective fovereigns. It continued, however, to be an object of policy with every monarch of abilities or vigour, to explode the trial by combat; and various edicts were iffued for this purpole. But the observation which was made concerning the right of private war, is equally applicable to the mode of trial under review. No custom, how abfurd foever it may be, if it has subsisted long, or derives its force from the manners and prejudices of the age in which it prevails, was ever abolished by the bare promulgation of laws and statutes. The sentiments of the people must change, or some new power sufficient to counteract it must be introduced. Such a change, accordingly, took place in Europe, as science gradually increased, and fociety advanced towards more perfect order. In proportion as the prerogative of Princes extended, and came to acquire new force, a power, interested in suppressing every practice favourable to the independance of the nobles, was introduced. The flruggle, nevertheless, sublisted for several centuries; sometimes the new regulations and ideas feemed to gain ground; fometimes ancient habits recurred; and though, upon the whole, the trial by combat went more and more into difuse, yet inflances of it occur, as late as the fixteenth century, in the history both of France and of England. In proportion as it declined, the regular administration of justice was restored, the proceedings of courts were directed by known laws, the fludy of these became an object of attention to judges, and the people of Europe advanced fall towards civility, when this great cause of the ferocity of their manners was removed [Y].

4 Ordon, tom. i. p. 328, 390, 435.

[Y] NOTE XXII.

3. By authorizing the right of appeal from the courts of SECT. L. the Barons to those of the King, and subjecting the decisions of the former to the review of the latter, a new step, not less confiderable than these which I have already mentioned, was taken towards establishing the regular, consistent, and vigorous administration of justice. Among all the encroachments of the feudal nobles on the prerogative of their Monarchs, their usurping the administration of justice with supreme authority, both in civil and criminal causes, within the precincts of their own estates, was the most fingular. In other nations, subjects have contended with their Princes, and have endeavoured to extend their own power and privileges; but in the history of their struggles and pretentions, we discover nothing similar to this right which the feudal barons claimed, and acquired. It must have been fomething peculiar in their genius and manners that fuggested this idea; and prompted them to infift on fine a claim. Among the rude people who conquered the various provinces of the Roman Empire, and established new kingdoms there, the pasfion of refentment, too impetuous to bear controul, was permitted to remain almost unrestrained by the authority of laws. The person offended, as has been observed, retained not only the right of profecuting but of punishing his adversary. To him it belonged to inflict fuch vengeance as fatiated his rage, or to accept of fuch fatisfaction as appealed it. But while fierce barbarians continued to be the fole judges in their own cause, their enmitties were implacable, and immortal; they fet no bounds either to the degree of their vengeance, or to the duration of their refentment. The excesses which this occasioned, proved so destructive of peace and order in fociety, as forced them to think of fome remedy. At first, arbiters interposed, and by persuasion Vol. I. Or or intreaty prevailed on the party offended to accept of a fine or composition from the aggressor, and to drop all farther prosecution. But as submission to persons who had no legal or magisterial authority, was altogether voluntary, it became necessary to establish indges, with power sufficient to enforce their own decisions. The leader whom they were accustomed to follow and to obey, whose courage they respected, and in whose integrity they placed confidence, was the person to whom a martial people naturally committed this important prerogative. Every chieftain was the commander of his tribe in war, and their judge in peace. Every baron led his vassals to the field, and administered justice to them in his hall. Their high-spirited dependants would not have recognized any other authority, or have submitted to any other jurisdiction. But in times of turbulence and violence, the exercise of this new function was attended not only with trouble, but with danger. No person could assume the character of a judge, if he did not possess power fufficient to protect the one party from the violence of private revenge, and to compel the other to accept of fuch reparation as he enjoined. In confideration of the extraordinary efforts which this office required, judges, befides the fine which they appointed to be paid as a compensation to the person or family who had been injured, levied an additional fum as a recompence for their own labour; and in all the feudal kingdoms the latter was as precifely afcertained, and as regularly exacted, as the former.

The privilege of appealing from the courts of the barons, auother great improvement in the adminuftration of judice.

Origin of the Supreme and independant iu ild. Etion of the nobility.

SECT. I.

The extent are ball efter's of this processes. Thus, by the natural operation of circumflances peculiar to the manners or political flate of the feudal nations, separate and territorial jurisfictions came not only to be established in every kingdom, but were established in such a way, that the interest of the SECT. I barons concurred with their ambition in maintaining and extending them. It was not merely a point of honour with the feudal nobles to dispense justice to their vassais; but from the exercise of that power arose one capital branch of their revenue; and the emoluments of their courts were frequently the main support of their dignity. It was with infinite zeal that they afferted and defended this high privilege of their order. By this institution, however, every kingdom in Europe was split into as many separate principalities as it contained powerful barons. Their vaffals, whether in peace or in war, were scarce sensible of any authority, but that of their superior lord. They felt themselves subject to no other command. They were amenable to no other The ties which linked together these smaller conjurisdiction. federacies became close and firm; the bonds of public union relaxed, or were diffolved. The nobles strained their invention in deviling regulations that tended to ascertain and perpetuate this distinction. In order to guard against any appearance of fubordination in their courts to those of the crown, they conftrained their monarchs to prohibit the royal judges from entering their territories, or from claiming any jurisdiction there: and if, either through mistake, or from the spirit of encroachment, any royal judge ventured to extend his authority to the vallals of a baron, they might plead their right of exemption. and the lord of whom they held could not only refcue them out of his hands, but was entitled to legal reparation for the injury and affront offered to him. The jurisdiction of the royal judges tearce reached beyond the narrow limits of the King's demefnes. Inflead of a regular gradation of courts, all acknowledging the authority of the fame general laws, and looking up to these as 12

SECT. I. the guides of their decisions, there were in every feudal kingdom a thousand independant tribunals, the proceedings of which were directed by local customs and contradictory forms. collision of jurisdiction between these numerous courts, often retarded the execution of justice: The variety and caprice of their modes of procedure must have for ever kept the administration of it from attaining any degree of uniformity or perfection.

Expedients employed in order to limit or abolish it.

ALL the monarchs of Europe perceived these encroachments on their jurisdiction, and bore them with impatience. usurpations of the nobles were so firmly established, and the danger of endeavouring to overturn them by open force was fo manifest, that they were obliged to remain satisfied with attempts to undermine them. Various expedients were employed for this purpose; each of which merit attention, as they mark the progress of law and equity in the feveral kingdoms of Europe. At first, Princes endeavoured to circumscribe the jurisdiction of the barons, by permitting them to take cognizance only of smaller offences, referving those of greater moment, under the appellation of Pleas of the Crown, and Royal Caufes, to be tried in the King's This affected only the barons of inferior note; the more powerful nobles scorned such a distinction, and not only claimed unlimited jurisdiction, but obliged their fovereigns to grant them charters, conveying or recognizing this privilege in The attempt, nevertheless, was producthe most ample form. tive of fome good consequences, and paved the way for more. It turned the attention of men towards a jurisdiction distinct from that of the baron whose vasials they were; it accustomed them to the pretentions of fuperiority which the crown claimed over territorial judges; and taught them, when oppressed by their own fuperior lord, to look up to their fovereign as their pro- Sect. I. tector. This facilitated the introduction of appeals, by which Princes brought the decisions of the baron's courts under the review of the royal judges. While trial by combat subsisted in full vigour, no point decided according to that mode; could be brought under the review of another court. It had been referred to the judgment of God; the iffue of battle had declared his will; and it would have been impious to have called in queftion the equity of the divine decision. But as soon as that barbarous custom began to fall into disuse, Princes encouraged the vassals of the barons to fue for redrefs, by appealing to the royal courts. The progress, however, of this practice, was slow and gradual. The first instances of appeals were on account of the delay, or the refusal of justice in the baron's court; and as these were countenanced by the ideas of fubordination in the feudal constitution, the nobles allowed them to be introduced without much opposi-But when these were followed by appeals on account of the injustice or iniquity of the sentence, the nobles then began to be fentible, that if this innovation became general, the shadow of power alone would remain in their hands, and all real authority and jurisdiction would center in those courts which possessed the right of review. They inftantly took the alaım, remonstrated against the encroachment, and contended boldly for their ancient privileges. But the monarchs in the different kingdoms of Europe purfued their plan with fleadiness and prudence. Though forced to suspend their operations, on some occasions, and seemingly to yield when any formidable confederacy of their vallals united against them, they refumed their measures, as foon as they observed the nobles to be remifs or feeble, and puffied them with vigour. They appointed the royal courts, which originally were ambulatory, SECT. I. latory, and irregular with respect to their times of meeting, to be held in a fixed place, and at flated feafons. They were follicitous to name judges of more diftinguished abilities than such as prefided in the courts of the barons. They added dignity to their character, and splendour to their assemblies. laboured to render their forms regular, and their decrees confistent. Such judicatories became, of course, the objects of public confidence as well as veneration. The people, relinquishing the partial tribunals of their lords, were eager to bring every subject of contest under the more equal and difcerning eye of those whom their fovereign had chosen to give judgment in his Thus Kings became once more the heads of the name. community, and the dispensers of justice to their subjects. The barons, in fome kingdoms, ceased to exercise their right of jurisdiction, because it sunk into contempt; in others, it was circumscribed by such regulations as rendered it innocent, or it was entirely abolished by express statutes. Thus the administration of justice taking its rife from one source, and following one direction, held its course in every state with more uniformity, and with greater force [Z].

The regulations of the cinon law promote a more perfect administration.

VI. THE forms and maxims of the canon law, which were become univerfally respectable from their authority in the spiritual courts, contributed not a little towards these improvements in juriforudence which I have enumerated. If the canon law be confidered politically, either as a fystem framed on purpose to affift the clergy in usurping powers and jurisliction no less repugnant to the nature of their function, than inconfiftent with the order of government; or as the chief infirument in effablithing the dominion of the Popes which thook the throne, and andangered the liberties of every kingdom in Europe, we must pronounce it one of the most formidable engines ever formed SECT. I. against the happiness of civil society. But if we contemplate it merely as a code of laws respecting the rights and property of individuals, and attend only to the civil effects of its decisions concerning these, we must view it in a different, and a much The progress more favourable light. In ages of ignorance and credulity, the calufarpation. ministers of religion are the objects of Superstitious veneration. When the barbarians who over-ran the Empire first embraced the Christian faith, they found the clergy in possession of confiderable power; and they naturally transferred to these new guides the profound submission and reverence which they were accustomed to yield to the priests of that religion which they had forfaken. They deemed their persons to be as facred as their function; and would have confidered it as impious to subject them to the profane jurisdiction of the laity. The clergy were not blind to the advantages which the weakness of mankind afforded them. They established courts, in which every question relating to their own character, their function, or their property, was They pleaded, and obtained an almost total exemption from the authority of civil judges. Upon different pretexts, and by a multiplicity of artifices, they communicated this privilege to fo many perfons, and extended their jurisdiction to such a variety of cases, that the greater part of those affairs which give rife to contest and litigation, was drawn under the cognizance of the spiritual courts.

of ecclehafti-

Bur in order to dispose the laity to suffer these usurpations without murmuring or opposition, it was necessary to convince them, that the administration of justice would be rendered more perfect by the establishment of this new jurisdiction. This was not a difficult undertaking, at the period when the clergy carried on their

The plan of ecclehallical jurity-udence mere perfect than that in the cu.l court.

SECT. I. encroachments with the greatest success. That scanty portion of science which served to guide men in the ages of darkness, was wholly engroffed by the clergy. They alone were accustomed to read, to enquire, and to reason. Whatever knowledge of ancient jurisprudence had been preserved, either by tradition, or in fuch books as had escaped the destructive rage of barbarians, was possessed only by them. Upon the maxims of that excellent fystem, they founded a code of laws confonant to the great principles of equity. Being directed by fixed and known rules, the forms of their courts were ascertained, and their decisions became uniform and confishent. Nor did they want authority fufficient to enforce their fentences. Excommunication and other ecclefiaftical centures, were punishments more formidable than any that civil judges could inflict in support of their decrees.

The good efficies of imitating and adopting it.

IT is not furprizing, then, that ecclefiaftical juriforudence should become such an object of admiration and respect; that exemption from civil jurisdiction was courted as a privilege, and conferred as a reward. It is not furprizing, that even to rude people, the maxims of the canon law should appear more equal and just than that ill-digested jurisprudence which directed all proceedings in the civil courts. According to the latter, the differences between contending barons were terminated, as in a flate of nature, by the fword; according to the former, every matter was subjected to the decision of laws. The one, by permitting judicial combats, left chance and force to be arbiters of right or wrong, of truth or falsehood; the other, passed judgment with respect to these by the maxims of equity, and the testimony of witnesses. Any error or iniquity in a sentence pronounced

STATE OF EUROPE.

nounced by a baron to whom feudal jurisdiction belonged, was SECT. irremediable, because originally it was subject to the review of no fuperior tribunal; the ecclefiaftical law established a regular gradetion of courts, through all which a cause might be carried by anpeal, until it was determined by that authority which was held to be supreme in the church. Thus the general and principles of the canon law prepared men for approving time three great afterstions in the feudal juriforndence which I have mentioned. But it was not with relocal to these points alone that the canon law suggested improvements beneficial to lociety. Many of the regulations, now decined the parriers of perional accurity, or the fafeguards of private property, are countries to the spirit, and repugnant to the maxims of the civil juripundence, known in Europe during feveral centuries, and were bellowed from the rules and practice of the ecclesiastical courts. Applerving the wildom and equity of the decisions in these courts, men began to perceive the necessity either of deferting the martial tribunals of the barons, or of attempting to reform them [AA].

VII. THE revival of the knowledge and study of the Roman law, co-operated with the causes which I have mentioned, in law contriintroducing more just and liberal ideas concerning the nature of government, and the administration of justice. Among the calamities which the devastations of the barbarians who broke in order. upon the Empire brought upon mankind, one of the greatest was their overturning the fystem of Roman jurisprudence, the noblest monument of the wisdom of that great people, formed to fubdue and to govern the world. The laws and regulations of a civilized community, were altogether repugnant to the man-

The revival of the Roman butes more liberal ideas concerning inflice and

The circumflances from which the Roman law fell into oblivion.

[AA] NOTE XXIV.

Vol. I.

K

ners

Sect. I

ners and ideas of these sierce invaders. They had respect to objects, of which a rude people had no conception; and were adapted to a flate of fociety with which they were entirely unacquainted. For this reason, wherever they settled, the Roman juriforudeace foon funk into oblivion, and lay buried for fome centuries under the load of those institutions which the inhabitants of Europe dignified with the name of laws. But towards the middle of the twelfth century, a copy of Justinian's Pandects was accidentally discovered in Italy: By that time, the state of society was so far advanced, and the ideas of men so much enlarged and improved by the occurrences of feveral centuries, during which they had continued in political union, that they were firmed with admiration of a system which their ancestors could not comprehend. Though they had not hitherto attained fuch a gree of refinement, as to catch from the ancients a relish for true philosophy, or speculative science; though they were still insensible to the beauty and elegance of classical compofition; they were sufficiently qualified to judge with respect to the merit of their system of laws, in which all the points most interesting to mankind, and the chief objects of their attention in every age, were fettled with difcernment, precision and equity. All men of letters studied this new science with eagerness; and within a few years after the discovery of the Pandects, professors of civil law were appointed, who taught it publickly in most countries of Europe.

Circamstances which fawoured the rewival of it.

The effects of this upon the ideas of men, and the dipenfation of justice. THE effects of having such a perfect model to study and to imitate were soon manifest. Men, as soon as they were acquainted with fixed and general laws, perceived the advantage of them, and became impatient to ascertain the principles and forms by which judges should regulate their decisions. Such SECT. was the ardour with which they carried on an undertaking of To great importance to fociety, that before the close of the twelfth century, the feudal law was reduced into a regular lystems the code of canon-law was enlarged and methodized; and the limit uncertain customs of different provinces or kingdoms, were collected and arranged with an order and accuracy acquired from the knowledge of Roman juriforudence. In fome countries of Europe the Roman law was adopted as hibfsdiary to their own ratericipal law; and all cales to which the latter did not extend. were decided according to the principles of the former. In others; the mexims as well as forms of Roman jurisprudence mingled amperceptibly with the laws of the country, and had a powerful, though dels senting, inducace, in improving and perfecting them [BB].

STATE OF EUROPE.

THESE various improvements in the lyttem of jurifprudence, and administration of justice, occasioned a change in manners of great importance, and of extensive effect. They professions. gave rife to a distinction of professions; they obliged men to cultivate different talents, and to aim at different accomplishments, in order to qualify themselves for the various departments and functions which became necessary in fociety'. Among uncivilized nations, there is but one profession honourable, that of arms. All the ingenuity and vigour of the human mind are exerted in acquiring military skill, or address. The functions of peace are few and simple; and require no particular course of education or of study, as a preparation for discharging them.

[BB] NOTE XXV.

Dr. Ferguson's Essay on the History of Civil Society, part iv. sect. 1.

K 2

This

SECT. I

This was the state of Europe during several centuries. Every gentleman, born a soldier, scorned any other occupation; he was taught no science but that of war; even his exercises and pastimes were feats of martial prowess. Nor did the judicial character, which persons of noble birth were alone entitled to assume, demand any degree of knowledge beyond that which such untutored soldiers possessed. To recollect a few traditionary customs which time had consirmed, and rendered respectable; to mark out the lists of battle with due formality; to observe the issue of the combat; and to pronounce whether it had been conducted according to the laws of arms; included every thing that a baron who acted as a judge, found it necessary to understand.

The effects of this on fociety.

Bur when the forms of legal proceedings were fixed, when the rules of decision were committed to writing, and collected into a body, law beggine a science, the knowledge of which required a regular course of study, together with long attention to the practice of courts. Martial and illiterate nobles, had neither leifure nor inclination to undertake a task so laborious, as well as so foreign from all the occupations which they deemed entertaining, or fuitable to their rank. They gradually relinquished their places in courts of justice, where their ignorance exposed themto contempt. They became weary of attending to the discussion of cases, which grew too intricate for them to comprehend. Not only the judicial determination of points which were the subject of controversy, but the conduct of all legal business and transactions was committed to persons trained by previous study and application to the knowledge of law. An order of men, to whom their fellow-citizens had daily recourse for advice, and to whom they looked up for decision in their most important concerns, naturally acquired confideration and influence in fociety.

were advanced to honours which had been confidered as the Szer. peculiar rewards of military virtue. They were entrusted with offices of the highest dignity, and most extensive power. Thus, another profession than that of arms, came to be introduced among the laity, and was reputed honourable. The functions of civil life were attended to. The talents requifite for discharging them were cultivated. A new road was opened to wealth and eminence. The arts and virtues of peace were placed in their proper rank, and received their due recompence [CC].

VIII. WHILE improvements to important with respect to the The spirit of flate of fociety, and the administration of pultice, gradually made progress in Europe, sentiments more liberal and generous had begun to animate the nobles. There were inspired by the spirit of Chivalry, which, though confidered, commonly, as a wild institution, the effect of caprice, and the fourth of extravagance, arose naturally from the state of society at that period, and had a very serious influence in refining the manners of the European The feudal state was a state of perpetual war, rapine, nations. and anarchy; during which the weak and unarmed were exposed every moment to infults or injuries. The power of the fovereign was too limited to prevent these wrongs; and the administration of justice too feeble to redress them. There was scarce any protection against violence and oppression, but what the valour and generofity of private persons afforded. The same fpirit of enterprize which had prompted fo many gentlemen to take arms in defence of the oppressed pilgrims in Paleftine, incited others to declare themselves the patrons and avengers of injured innocence at home. When the final reduction.

chivalry introduces more liberal fentiments, and more generous manners.

Origin of chivalry.

SECT. I. of the Holy Land under the dominion of Infidels put an end to these foreign expeditions, the latter was the only employment left for the activity and courage of adventurers. To check the infolence of overgrown oppressors; to succour the distressed; to rescue the helpless from captivity; to protect, or to avenge women, orphans, and ecclefiaffics, who could not bear arms in their own defence; to redress wrongs, and to remove grievances; were deemed acts of the highest prowess and merit. humanity, courtefy, justice, honour, were the characteristic qualities of chivalry. To these were added religion, which mingled itself with every passion and institution during the middle ages, and by infuling a large proportion of enthulialtic zeal, gave them fuch force, as carried them to romantic excels. Men were trained to knighthood by a long previous discipline; they were admitted into the order by follownities no less devout than pompous; every perion of noble birth courted that honour; it was deemed a distinction superior to royalty; and monarchs were proud to receive it from the hands of private gentlanen.

Its beneficial effects.

THIS fingular institution, in which valour, gallantry, and religion, were fo strangely blended, was wonderfully adapted to the taste and genius of martial nobles; and its effects were soon visible in their manners. War was carried on with less ferocity, when humanity came to be deemed the ornament of knighthood no less than courage. More gentle and polished manners were introduced, when courtefy was recommended as the most amiable of knightly virtues. Violence and oppression decreased, when it was reckoned meritorious to check and to punish them. A ferupulous adherence to truth, with the most religious attention to fulfil every engagement, became the diffinguishing characteriffic teristic of a gentleman, because chivalry was regarded as the school SECT. of honour, and inculcated the most delicate sensibility with respect to that point. The admiration of these qualities, together with the high distinctions and prerogatives conferred on knightheod in every part of Europes inspired persons of noble birth on some occasions with a species of military fanaticism, and led them to extravagant enterprizes. But they imprinted deeply in their minds the principles of generolity and honour. These were firengthened by every thing that can affect the fenfes, or touch the heart. The wild exploits of those romantic knights who fallied forth in quest of advengures, are well known, and have been treated with proper ridicule. The political and permanent effects of the mait of chivalry have been less observed. Perhaps, the humanity which accompanies, all the operations of, war, the refinements of gallantry, and the gaint of honour, the three chief circumstances which distinguish medern from ancient manners, may be ascribed in a great measure to this whimsical institetion, scemingly of little benefit to mankind. The sentiments which chivalry inspired, had a wonderful influence on manners and conduct during the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth They were fo deeply rooted, that they continued to centuries. operate after the vigour and reputation of the institution itself began to decline. Some confiderable transactions, recorded in the following history, resemble the adventurous exploits of chivalry, rather than the well regulated operations of found policy. Some of the most eminent personages, whose characters will be delineated, were firongly tinctured with this romantic spirit. Francis I. was ambitious to distinguish himself by all the qualities of an accomplished knight, and endeavoured to imitate the enterprizing genius of chivalry in war, as well as its pomp and courtefy during peace. The fame which he acquired by these splendid actions, so far dazzled his more temperate rival, that he departed on some occasions from his usual prudence and moderation, and emulated Francis in deeds of prowess, or of gallantry [DD].

SECT. I

The progress of science has great influence on the manners and character of men.

IX. THE progress of science, and the cultivation of literature, had confiderable effect in changing the manners of the European nations, and introducing that civility and refinement by which they are now distinguished. At the time when their Empire was overturned, the Romans, though they had loft that correct tafte which has rendered the productions of their anceltors the flandards of excellence, and models for imitation to fucceeding ages, still preserved their love of letters, and cultivated the arts with great ardour. But rude barbarians were fo far from being struck with any admiration of these unknown accomplishments, that they despited them. They were not arrived at that state of society, in which those faculties of the human mind, that have beauty and elegance for their objects, begin to unfold themselves. They were strangers to all those wants and desires which are the parents of ingenious invention; and as they did not comprehend either the merit or utility of the Roman arts, they destroyed the monuments of them, with industry not inferior to that with which their posterity have since studied to preserve, or to recover them. The convulsions occasioned by their settlement in the Empire; the frequent as well as violent revolutions in every kingdom which they established; together with the interior defects in the form of government which they introduced, banished security and leisure; prevented the growth of taste, or the culture of science; and kept Europe, during several centuries, in that state of ignorance which has been already described. But the events and institutions which I have enumerated, produced great alterations in society. As soon as their operation, in restoring liberty and independance to one part of the community, began to be felt; as soon as they began to communicate to all the members of society some taste of the advantages arising from commerce, from public order, and from personal security, the human mind became conscious of powers which it did not formerly perceive, and fond of occupations or pursuits of which it was formerly incapable. Towards the beginning of the twelsth century, we discern the first symptoms of its awakening from that lethargy in which it had long been sunk, and observe it turning with curiosity and attention towards new objects.

Among ill directed,

THE first literary efforts, however, of the European nations in the middle ages, were extremely ill-directed. nations, as well as individuals, the powers of imagination attain some degree of vigour before the intellectual faculties are much exercifed in speculative or abstract disquisition. Men are poets before they are philosophers. They feel with sensibility, and describe with force, when they have made but little progress in investigation or reasoning. The age of Homer and of Hefiod long preceded that of Thales, or of Socrates. happily for literature, our ancestors deviating from this course which nature points out, plunged at once into the depths of abstruse and metaphysical inquiry. They had been converted to the Christian faith, soon after they settled in their new conquests. But they did not receive it pure. fumption of men had added to the fimple and inftructive doc-VOL. L L trines

SECT. I. trines of Christianity, the theories of a vain philosophy, that attempted to penetrate into mysteries, and to decide questions which the limited faculties of the human mind are unable to comprehend, or to refolve. These over-curious speculations were incorporated with the fystem of religion, and came to be confidered as the most effential part of it. As soon, then, as curiofity prompted men to inquire and to reason, these were the subjects which first presented themselves, and engaged their attention. The scholastic theology, with its infinite train of bold disquifitions, and fubtile distinctions concerning points which are not the object of human reason, was the first production of the spirit of enquiry after it began to refume some degree of activity and vigour in Europe. It was not this circumstance alone that gave fuch a wrong turn to the minds of men, when they began again. to exercise talents which they had so long neglected. Most of the persons who attempted to revive literature in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, had received instruction, or derived their principles of science from the Greeks in the eastern Empire, or from the Arabians in Spain and Africa. Both these people, acute and inquisitive to excess, corrupted those sciences which they cultivated. The former rendered theology a system of speculative refinement, or of endless controversy. The latter communicated to philosophy a spirit of metaphysical and frivolous fubtlety. Missed by these guides, the persons who first applied to science were involved in a maze of intricate inquiries. Instead of allowing their fancy to take its natural range, and to produce fuch works of invention as might have improved their taste, and refined their sentiments; instead of cultivating those arts which embellish human life, and render it comfortable; they were fettered by authority, they were led astray by example, and wasted walled the whole force of their genius in speculations as unavailing as they were difficult.

SECT. I.

BUT fruitless and ill-directed as these speculations were, their novelty rouzed, and their boldness interested the human mind. The ardour with which men pursued these uninviting studies, was astonishing. Genuine philosophy was never cultivated, in any enlightened age, with greater zeal. Schools, upon the model of these instituted by Charlemagne, were opened in every cathedral, and almost in every monastery of note. Colleges and univerlities were erected, and formed into communities or corporations, governed by their own laws, and invefted with feparate and extensive jurisdiction over their own members. A regular course of studies was planned. Privileges of great value were conferred on masters and scholars. Academical titles and honours of various kinds were invented, as a recompence for both. Nor was it in the schools alone that superiority in science led to reputation and authority; it became the object of respect in life, and advanced such as acquired it to a rank of no inconfiderable eminence. Allured by all these advantages, an incredible number of students resorted to these new feats of learning, and crowded with eagerness into that new path which was opened to fame and distinction.

They had, however, confiderable effects.

But how confiderable foever these first efforts may appear, there was one circumstance which prevented the effects of them from being as extensive as they ought to have been. All the languages in Europe, during the period under review, were barbarous. They were destitute of elegance, of force, and even of perspicuity. No attempt had been hitherto made to improve

A circumflance which prevented their being more extenfive.

SECT. I. or to polish them. The Latin tongue was consecrated by the church to religion. Custom, with authority scarce less sacred, had appropriated it to literature. All the sciences cultivated in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, were taught in Latin. All books with respect to them were written in that language. T_0 have treated of any important subject in a modern language, would have been deemed a degradation of it. This confined science within a very narrow circle. The learned alone were admitted into the temple of knowledge; the gate was shut against all others, who were allowed to remain involved in their former darkness and ignorance.

Its influence on manners merits attention.

BUT though science was thus prevented, during several ages, from diffusing itself through society, and its influence was circumscribed; the progress of it may be mentioned, nevertheless, among the great causes which contributed to introduce a change of manners into Europe. That ardent, though ill-judged spirit of enquiry which I have described, occasioned a fermentation of mind which put ingenuity and invention in motion, and gave them vigour. It led men to a new employment of their faculties, which they found to be agreeable as well as interesting. It accustomed them to exercises and occupations which tended to foften their manners, and to give them some relish for those gentle virtues, which are peculiar to nations among whom science hath been cultivated with success [EE].

The progress of commerce had great influence on manners and government.

X. THE progress of commerce had considerable influence in polishing the manners of the European nations, and in leading them to order, equal laws, and humanity. The wants of men, in the original and most simple state of society, are so few, and SECT. I. their defires fo limited, that they rest contented with the natural productions of their climate and foil, or with what they can add to these by their own rude industry. They have no superfluities to dispose of, and few necessities that demand a supply. Every little community fublishing on its own domestick stock, and fatisfied with it, is either unacquainted with the states around it, or at variance with them. Society and manners must be consi- Low state of derably improved, and many provisions must be made for pub- "the middle lic order and personal security, before a liberal intercourse can take place between different nations. We find, accordingly, that the first effect of the settlement of the barbarians in the Empire, was to divide those nations which the Roman power had united. Europe was broken into many separate communities. The communication between these divided states ceased almost totally during several centuries. Navigation was dangerous in seas infested by pirates; nor could strangers trust to a friendly reception in the ports of uncivilized nations. tween distant parts of the same kingdom, the intercourse was rare The lawless rapine of banditti, together with the and difficult. avowed exactions of the nobles, scarce less formidable and oppressive, rendered a journey of any length a perilous enterprize. Fixed to the spot in which they resided, the greater part of the inhabitants of Europe loft, in a great measure, the knowledge of remote regions, and were unacquainted with their names, their fituations, their climates, and their commodities.

[EE] NOTE XXVIII.

VARIOUS causes, contributed to revive the spirit of commerce, Causes of its and to renew in some degree the intercourse between different nations. The Italians, by their connection with Constantinople

SECT. I. and other cities of the Greek empire, preserved in their own country fome relish for the precious commodities, and curious manufactures of the East. They communicated some knowledge of these to the countries contiguous to Italy. This commerce, however, was extremely limited, nor was the intercourse considerable which it occasioned between different nations. The Crufades, by leading multitudes from every corner of Europe into Asia, opened a more extensive communication between the East and West, which subsisted for two centuries; and though the object of these expeditions was conquest and not commerce; though the issue of them proved as unfortunate, as the motives for undertaking them were wild and enthuliaftic, their commercial effects, as hath been shewn, were both beneficial and permanent. During the continuance of the Crusades, the great cities in Italy and in other countries of Europe acquired liberty, and together with it fuch privileges as rendered them respectable and independant communities. Thus, in every state there was formed a new order of citizens, to whom commerce presented itself as their proper object, and opened to them a certain path to wealth and dignity. Soon after the close of the Holy war, the mariner's compass was invented, which, by rendering navigation more secure as well as more adventrous, facilitated the communication between remote nations, and brought them nearer to each other.

First among the Italians.

THE Italian States, during the same period, established a regular commerce with the East in the ports of Egypt, and drew from thence all the rich products of the Indies. introduced into their own territories manufactures of various kinds, and carried them on with great ingenuity and vigour.

They

They attempted new arts; and transplanted from warmer climates, SECT. L. to which they had been hitherto deemed peculiar, feveral natural productions which now furnish the materials of a lucrative and extended commerce. All these commodities, whether imported from Asia, or produced by their own skill, they disposed of to great advantage among the other people of Europe, who, began to acquire some taste of elegance unknown to their ancestors, or despised by them. During the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, the commerce of Europe was almost entirely in the hands of the Italians, more commonly known in those ages by the name of Lombards. Companies or focieties of Lombard merchants settled in every different kingdom. They were taken under the immediate protection of the feveral governments. They enjoyed extensive privileges and immunities. The operation of the ancient barbarous laws concerning strangers was fuspended with respect to them. They became the carriers. the manufacturers, and the bankers of all Europe.

WHILE the Italians, in the fouth of Europe, cultivated Then by trade with such industry and success, the commercial spirit means of the Hansatick. awakened in the north, towards the middle of the thirteenth century. As the nations around the Baltick were, at that time, extremely barbarous, and infested that sea with their piracies, this obliged the cities of Lubeck and Hamburgh, foon after they began to open some trade with these people, to enter into a league of mutual defence. They derived fuch advantages from this union, that other towns acceded to their confederacy, and, in a short time, eighty of the most considerable cities scattered through those vast countries which stretch from the bottom of SECT. I. the Baltick to Cologne on the Rhine, joined in the famous Hanscatick league, which became so formidable, that its alliance was courted, and its enmity was dreaded by the greatest monarchs. The members of this powerful affociation formed the first systematick plan of commerce known in the middle ages, and conducted it by common laws enacted in their general assemblies. They supplied the rest of Europe with naval stores, and pitched on different towns, the most eminent of which was Bruges in Flanders, where they established staples in which their commerce was regularly carried on. Thither the Lombards brought the productions of India, together with the manufactures of Italy, and exchanged them for the more bulky, but not less useful commodities of the North. The Hanscatick merchants disposed of the cargoes which they received from the Lombards, in the ports of the Baltick, or carried them up the great rivers into the interior parts of Germany.

Commerce makes progress in the Netherlands.

This regular intercourse opened between the North and South of Europe made them sensible of their mutual wants, and created fuch new and vast demands for commodities of every kind, that it excited among the inhabitants of the Netherlands a more vigorous spirit in carrying on the two great manufactures of wool and flax, which feem to have been confiderable in that country as far back as the age of Charlemagne. As Bruges became the centre of communication between the Lombard and Hanscatick merchants, the Flemings traded with both in that city to fuch extent as well as advantage as spread among them a general habit of industry, which long rendered Flanders and the adjacent adjacent provinces the most opulent, the most populous, and best Secr. I. cultivated countries in Europe.

STRUCK with the flourishing state of these provinces, of which And in Eng. he discerned the true cause, Edward III. of England, endeavoured to excite a spirit of industry among his own subjects, who, blind to the advantages of their fituation, and ignorant of the fource from which opulence was destined to flow into their country, totally neglected commerce, and did not even attempt those manufactures, the materials of which they furnished to foreigners. By alluring Flemish artisans to settle in his dominions, as well as by many wife laws for the encouragement and regulation of trade, he gave a beginning to the woolen manufactures of England, and first turned the active and enterprizing genius of his people towards those arts which have raised the English to the highest rank among commercial nations.

THIS increase of commerce, and of intercourse between na- The beneficial tions, how inconfiderable foever it may appear in respect of effects of this. their rapid and extensive progress during the last and present age, feems vast, when we compare it with the state of both in Europe previous to the twelfth century. It did not fail of producing great effects. Commerce tends to wear off those prejudices which maintain diffinction and animofity between nations. It foftens and polifhes the manners of men. It unites them, by one of the strongest of all ties, the defire of supplying their mutual wants. It disposes them to peace, by establishing in every state an order of citizens bound by their interest to be the guardians of publick tranquillity. As foon as the com-Vol. I. M mercial

SECT. I. mercial spirit begins to acquire vigour, and to gain an ascendant in any society, we discover a new genius in its policy, its alliances, its wars, and its negociations. Conspicuous proofs of this occur in the history of the Italian States, of the Hanscatick league, and the cities of the Netherlands during the period under review. In proportion as commerce made its way into the different countries of Europe, they successively turned their attention to those objects, and adopted those manners, which occupy and diffinguish polished nations [FF].

[FF] NOTE XXIX.

${f V}$ I ${f E}$ ${f W}$

OF THE

PROGRESS OF SOCIETY

I N

E U R O P E,

FROM THE

SUBVERSION OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE,

TO THE

BEGINNING OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

SECTION II.

View of the Progress of Society in Europe, with respect to the command of the national force requisite in foreign operations.

SUCH are the events and inflitutions, which by their powerful operation contributed, gradually, to introduce more regular government and more polifhed manners into the various nations of Europe. When we furvey the flate of fociety, or the character of individuals, at the opening of the fifteenth century, and then turn back to view the condition of both at

Sacr. II.

State of fociety greatly improved at the beginning of the firrecotic century.

the

M 2

SECT. II. the time when the barbarous tribes which overturned the Roman power completed their fettlement in their new conquests, the progress which mankind had made towards order and refinement will appear immense.

Still defective with referent to the command of the national force.

GOVERNMENT, however, was still far from having attained that state, in which extensive monarchies act with united vigour, or carry on great undertakings with perfeverance and fuccefs. Small tribes or communities, even in their rudest state, may operate in concert, and exert their utmost force. They are excited to act not by the diffant objects, and fubtile speculations, which interest or affect men in polished focictics, but by their present feelings. The infults of an enemy kindle refentment; the fuccess of a rival tribe awakens emulation; these passions communicate from breast to breast, and all the members of the community, with united ardour, rush into the field in order to gratify their revenge, or to acquire diffinction. But in widely extended states, such as the great kingdoms of Europe at the beginning of the fifteenth century, where there is little intercourse between the distant members of the community, and where every great enterprize requires previous concert and long preparation, nothing can rouse and call forth their united strength, but the absolute command of a Despot, or the powerful influence of regular policy. Of the former the vast Empires in the East are an example; the irrefiftible mandate of the Sovereign reaches the most remote provinces of his dominions, and compels whatever number of his subjects he is pleased to summon, to follow his standard. The kingdoms of Europe, in the present age, are an instance of the latter; the Prince, by the less violent, but no less effectual operation 1 operation of laws and a well regulated government, is enabled SECT. II. to avail himself of the whole force of his state, and to employ it in enterprizes which require strenuous and persevering efforts.

But, at the opening of the fifteenth century, the political constitution in all the kingdoms of Europe was very different very limited. from either of these states of government. The several monarchs, though they had somewhat enlarged the boundaries of prerogative by fuccessful encroachments on the immunities and privileges of the nobility, were possessed of an authority extremely limited. The laws and interior police of kingdoms, though much improved by the various events and regulations which I have enumerated, were still feeble and imperfect. In every country, a numerous body of nobles, still formidable notwithstanding the various expedients employed to depress them, watched all the motions of their fovereign with a jealous attention, which fet bounds to his ambition, and either prevented his forming schemes of extensive enterprize, or thwarted the execution of them.

The power of

THE ordinary revenues of every Prince were so extremely fmall as to be inadequate to any great undertaking. He de- nues small. pended for extraordinary supplies on the good will of his subjects, who granted them often with a reluctant and always with a sparing hand.

As the revenues of Princes were inconfiderable, the armies which they could bring into the field were unfit for long and effectual fervice. Inflead of being able to employ troops trained to skill in arms, and to military subordination, by regular difcipline,

Their armies unfit for con-

SECT. II. cipline, Monarchs were obliged to depend on such forces as their vassals conducted to their standard in consequence of their military tenures. These, as they were bound to remain under arms only for a short time, could not march far from their usual place of residence, and being more attached to the lord of whom they held, than to the Sovereign whom they ferved, were often as much disposed to counteract as to forward his schemes. Nor were they, even if they had been more subject to the command of the monarch, proper instruments to carry into execution any great and arduous enterprize. The strength of an army formed either for conquest or defence 'lies in infantry. To the stability and discipline of their legions, confisting chiefly of infantry; the Romans during the times of the republick were indebted for all their victorics; and when their descendants, forgetting the institutions which had led them to universal dominion, so far altered their military system as to place their principal confidence in a numerous cavalry, the undisciplined impetuosity of the barbarous nations who fought mostly on foot, was fufficient, as I have already observed, to overcome them. These nations soon after they settled in their new conquests, uninstructed by the fatal error of the Romans, relinquished the customs of their ancestors and converted the chief force of their armies into cavalry. Among the Romans this change was occasioned by the effeminacy of their troops, who could not endure the fatigues of fervice, which their more virtuous and hardy ancestors sustained with case. Among the people who established the new monarchies into which Europe was divided, this innovation in military difcipline feems to have flowed from the pride of the nobles, who scorning to mingle with persons of inferior rank, aimed at being diffinguished from them in the field as well as during Sect. IL. peace. The inflitution of chivalry, and the frequency of Tournaments, in which knights, in complete armour, entered the · lifts on horfeback with extraordinary fplendour, difplaying amazing address, and force, and valour, brought cavalry into still greater esteem. The fondness for that service increased to fuch a degree, that, during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, the armies of Europe were composed almost entirely of cavalry. No gentleman would appear in the field but on horseback. To serve in any other manner he would have deemed derogatory to his rank. The cavalry, by way of diftinction, was called, The battle, and on it alone depended the fate of every action. The infantry, collected from the dregs and refuse of the people, ill armed and worse disciplined, was of no account.

As these circumstances rendered the operations of particular kingdoms less considerable and less vigorous, so they long kept the Princes of Europe from giving fuch attention to the schemes and transactions of their neighbours, as led them to form any of enation. regular fystem of publick security. They prevented them from uniting in confederacy, or from acting with concert, in order to establish such a distribution and balance of power, as should hinder any flate from rifing to a superiority, which might endanger the general liberty and independance. During feveral centuries, the nations of Furope appear to have confidered themselves as separate societies, searce connected together by any common interest, and little concerned in each others affairs or operations. An extensive commerce did not afford them an opportunity of observing and penetrating into the schemes

They are racepable of i ferming anv general crexter five plan of i SECT. II. of every different state. They had not ambassadors residing constantly in every court to watch and give early intelligence of all its motions. The expectation of remote advantages, or the prospect of distant and contingent evils were not sufficient to excite nations to take arms. They only, who were within the sphere of immediate danger, and unavoidably exposed to injury or insult, thought themselves interested in any contest, or bound to take precautions for their own safety.

They were little connected with each other.

WHOEVER records the transactions of any of the more confiderable European states during the two last centuries, must write the history of Europe. Its various kingdoms, throughout that period, have been formed into one great system, so closely united, that each holding a determinate station, the operations of one are so felt by all, as to influence their counsels and regulate their measures. But previous to the sisteenth century, unless when vicinity of territory rendered the occasions of discord frequent and unavoidable, or when national emulation somented or embittered the spirit of hostility, the affairs of different countries are seldom interwoven. In each kingdom of Europe great events and revolutions happened, which the other powers beheld with the same indifference as if they had been uninterested spectators, to whom the effect of these transactions could never extend.

A confirmation of this from the affairs of France. During the violent struggles between France and England, and notwithstanding the alarming progress which was made towards rendering one Prince the master of both these kingdoms, hardly one measure which can be considered as the result of a sagacious and prudent policy, was formed in order to guard against against an event so fatal to Europe. The Dukes of Burgundy SECT. II. and Bretagne, whom their fituation would not permit to remain neutral, engaged, it is true, in the contest; but they more frequently took the part to which their passions prompted them, than that which a just discernment of the danger which threatened themselves and the tranquillity of Europe should have pointed out. The other Princes, seemingly unaffected by the alternate successes of the contending parties, left them to decide the quarrel, or interpoled only by feeble and ineffectual negociations.

NOTWITHSTANDING the perpetual hostilities in which the From those of various kingdoms of Spain were engaged during feveral centuries, and the fuccessive occurrences which visibly tended to unite that part of the continent into one great monarchy, the Princes of Europe scarce took a fingle step, which discovers that they gave any attention to that important event. They permitted a power to arise imperceptibly, and to acquire strength there, which foon became formidable to all its neighbours.

AMIDST the violent convulsions with which the spirit of From those of domination in the See of Rome, and the turbulent ambition of the German nobles, agitated the Empire, neither the authority of the Popes, feconded by all their artifices and intrigues, nor the follicitations of the Emperors, could induce any of the powerful monarchs in Europe to engage in their quarrel, or to avail themselves of many favourable opportunities of interposing with effect and advantage.

This inactivity occasioned entirely by the state of government.

This amazing inactivity, during transactions so interesting, is not to be imputed to any incapacity of discerning their political consequences. The power of judging with fagacity, and of acting with vigour, is the portion of men in every age. The Monarchs who reigned in the different kingdoms of Europe during feveral centuries were not blind to their particular interest, negligent of the publick safety, or strangers to the method of securing both. If they did not adopt that salutary fystem, which teaches modern politicians to take the alarm at the prospect of distant dangers, which prompts them to check the first encroachments of any formidable power, and which renders each state the guardian, in some degree, of the rights and independance of all its neighbours, this was owing entirely to the imperfections and disorders in the civil government of each country, which made it impossible for sovereigns to act fuitably to those ideas which the posture of affairs, and their own observation must have suggested.

Events happened during the 15th century which render the efforts of nations more powerful and extensive. happened, which, by giving Princes more entire command of the force in their respective dominions, rendered their operations more vigorous and extensive. In consequence of this, the affairs of different kingdoms becoming more frequently as well as more intimately connected, they were gradually accustomed to act in concert and confederacy, and were insensibly prepared for forming a system of policy, in order to establish or to preserve such a balance of power as was most consistent with the general security. It was during the reign of Charles the fifth, that the ideas, on which this system is founded, first came to be fully understood. It was then, that the maxims by which it has been uniformly maintained fince that zera were universally Sect. II. adopted. On this account, a view of the causes and events which contributed to establish a plan of policy more salutary and extensive than any that has taken place in the conduct of human affairs, is not only a necessary introduction to the following work, but is a capital object in the history of Europe.

The first event, that occasioned any considerable alteration in The first of the arrangement of affairs in Europe, was the annexation of depriving the the extensive territories, which England possessed on the continent, to the crown of France. While the English were masters of several of the most fertile and opulent provinces in France, and a great part of its most martial inhabitants were bound to follow their standard, their monarchs considered themselves rather as the rivals, than as the vassals of the sovereign of whom they held. The Kings of France, circumscribed and thwarted in their schemes and operations by an adversary no less jealous than formidable, durst not venture upon any enterprize of importance or of difficulty. The English were always at hand, ready to oppose them. They disputed even their right to their crown, and being able to penetrate, with ease, into the heart of the kingdom, could arm against them those very hands which ought to have been employed in their defence. counsels, and feeble efforts were natural to monarchs in such a fituation. France, difmembred and over-awed, could not attain its proper station in the system of Europe. But the death of Henry of England, happily for France, and not unfortunately for his own country, delivered the French from the calamity of having a foreign master seated on their throne. The

these was the English of their territo. ries on the continent.

N 2

weakness

SECT. II.

weakness of a long minority, the dissensions in the English court, together with the unsteady and languid conduct which these occasioned, afforded the French a favourable opportunity of recovering the territories which they had lost. The native valour of the nobility of France, heightened to an enthusiastick considence, by a supposed interposition of heaven in their behalf; conducted in the field by skilful leaders; and directed in the cabinet by a prudent monarch; was exerted with such vigour and success, during this favourable juncture, as not only wrested from the English their new conquests, but stript them of their ancient possessions, and reduced them within the narrow precincts of Calais, and its petty territory.

The effect of this on increasing the power of the French monarchy. As foon as fo many confiderable provinces were re-united to their dominions, the Kings of France, confcious of this acquifition of strength, began to form bolder schemes of interior policy, as well as of foreign operations. They immediately became formidable to their neighbours, who began to fix their attention on their measures and motions, the importance of which they fully perceived. From this æra, France, possessed of the advantages which it derives from the situation and contiguity of its territories, as well as from the number and valour of its people, rose to new influence in Europe, and was the first power in a condition to give alarm to the jealousy or fears of the states around it.

On the flate of the military force in the nation.

NOR was France indebted for this increase of importance merely to the re-union of the provinces which had been torn from it. A circumstance attended the recovery of these, which, though less considerable, and less observed, contributed not a little to give additional vigour and decision to all the efforts of that monarchy. During the obstinate struggles between France and England, all the defects of the military fystem under the feudal government Sect. II. were fenfibly felt. A war of long continuance languisted, when carried on by troops bound and accustomed to keep the field only for a few weeks. Armies, composed chiefly of heavy armed cavalry, were unfit either for the attack or the defence of the many towns and castles, which it became necessary to guard or to reduce. In order to obtain fuch permanent and effective force, as became requisite during these lengthened contests, the Kings of France took into their pay considerable bands of mercenary foldiers, levied fometimes among their own fubjects, and fometimes in foreign countries. But as the feudal policy provided no sufficient fund for such extraordinary service, these adventurers were dismissed at the close of every campaign, or upon any prospect of accommodation; and having been little accustomed to the restraints of discipline, they frequently turned their arms against the country which they had been hired to defend, and desolated it with no less cruelty than its foreign enemies.

> the introduction of flanding armies.

A BODY of troops kept constantly on foot, and regularly It occasions trained to military subordination, would have supplied what was wanting in the feudal conflitution, and have furnished Princes with the means of executing enterprizes, to which they were then unequal. Such an establishment, however, was so repugnant to the genius of feudal policy, and fo incompatible with the privileges and pretentions of the nobles, that during feveral centuries no monarch was either fo bold, or fo powerful, as to venture on any step towards introducing it. At last, Charles VII. availing himself of the reputation which he had acquired by his fuccesses against the English, and taking advantage of the impressions of terror which such a formidable enemy had left upon the minds of his subjects, executed that which his predecessors

durst

SECT. II. durst not attempt. Under pretence of keeping always on foot a force sufficient to defend the kingdom against any sudden inva-A. D. 1445. fion of the English, he, at the time when he disbanded his other troops, retained under arms a body of nine thousand cavalry, and of fixteen thousand infantry. He appropriated funds for the regular payment of these; he stationed them in different places of the kingdom, according to his pleafure; and appointed the officers, who commanded and disciplined them. The prime nobility courted this fervice, in which they were taught to depend on their fovereign, to execute his orders, and to look up to him as the judge and rewarder of their merit. The feudal militia, composed of the vassals whom the nobles could call out to follow-their standard, as it was in no degree comparable to a body of foldiers regularly trained to war, funk gradually in reputation. The strength of armies came to be estimated only by the number of disciplined men which they contained. Tess than a century, the nobles and their military tenants, though fometimes summoned to the field, according to ancient form, were considered as an incumbrance upon the troops with which they acted; and were viewed with contempt by foldiers accustomed to the vigorous and steady operations of regular service.

The effects of this.

Thus the regulations of Charles the seventh, by establishing the first standing army known in Europe, occasioned an important revolution in its affairs and policy. By depriving the nobles of that direction of the military force of the state, which had raifed them to fuch high authority and importance, it gave a deep wound to the feudal aristocracy, in that part where its power feemed to be most complete.

FRANCE, by forming this body of regular troops, at a time SECT. II. when there was scarce a squadron or company kept in constant pay in any other part of Europe, acquired such advantages, either for attack or defence, over its neighbours, that felf-prefervation made it necessary for them to imitate its example. Mercenary troops were introduced into all the confiderable kingdoms on the continent. They gradually became the only military force that was employed or trusted. It has long been the chief object of policy to increase and to support them, and the great aim of Princes or ministers to discredit and to annihilate all othermeans of national activity or defence.

As the Kings of France got the fact of other powers in esta- The moblishing in their dominions a military force, which enabled them France ento carry on foreign operations with more vigour, and to greater extent, so they were the first who effectually broke the feudal aristocracy, and humbled the great vassals of the crown; who by their exorbitant power had long circumscribed the royal prerogative within very narrow limits, and had rendered all the efforts of the monarchs of Europe inconfiderable. Many things concurred to undermine, gradually, the power of the feudal? aristocracy in France. The wealth and property of the nobility were greatly impaired during the long wars, which the kingdom was obliged to maintain with the English. The extraordipary zeal with which they exerted themselves in defence of their country against its ancient enemies, exhausted the fortunes of some great families. As almost every province in the kingdom was, in its turn, the feat of war, the lands of others were exposed to the depredations of the enemy, were ravaged by the mercenary troops which their fovereigns hired occasionally, but narchs of couraged to extend their prerogative. -

SECT. II. could not pay, or were desolated with rage still more destructive by the peafants, in their different infurrections. At the same time, the necessities of government having forced their Kings upon the desperate expedient of making great and sudden alterations in the current coin of the kingdom, the fines, quitrents, and other payments, fixed by ancient custom, funk much in value, and the revenues of a fief were reduced far below the sum which it had once yielded. During their contests with the English, in which a generous nobility courted every station where danger appeared, or honour could be gained, many families of note became extinct, and their fiefs were reunited to the Other fiefs, in a long course of years, fell to female heirs, and were divided among them; were diminished by profuse donations to the church, or were broken and split by the fuccession of remote collateral heirs.

The progress of the royal Power under Charles VII.

ENCOURAGED by these manifest symptoms of decline in that body which he wished to depress, Charles VII. during the first interval of peace with England, made several efforts towards establishing the regal prerogative on the ruins of the aristocracy. But his obligations to the nobles were fo many, as well as recent. and their fervices in recovering the kingdom fo splendid, as made it necessary for him to proceed with moderation and caution. Such, however, was the authority which the crown had acquired by the progress of its arms against the English, and fo much was the power of the nobility diminished, that, without any opposition, he soon made innovations of great consequence in the constitution. He not only established that formidable body of regular troops, which has been mentioned, but he was the first

monarch

Boulainvilliers Histoire de Government de France, Lettre xii.

monarch of France who, by his royal edict, without the concur- SECT. II. rence of the States-general of the kingdom, levied an extraor- A. D. 1440. dinary subsidy on his people. He prevailed likewise with his · subjects, to render several taxes perpetual, which had formerly been imposed occasionally, and exacted during a short time. By means of all these, he acquired such an increase of power, and extended his prerogative fo far beyond its ancient limits, that, from being the most dependant Prince who had ever sat upon the throne of France, he came to possess, during the latter years of his reign, a degree of authority which none of his predecessors had enjoyed for feveral ages b.

THAT plan of humbling the nobility which Charles formed, Under his fon Louis XI. carried on with a bolder spirit, and with greater fuccess. Louis was formed by nature to be a tyrant; and at whatever period he had been called to ascend the throne, his reign must have abounded with schemes to oppress his people, and to render his own power absolute. Subtle, unfeeling, crucl; a stranger to every principle of integrity, and regardless of decency, he scorned all the restraints which a sense of honour, or the defire of fame, impose even on ambitious men. Sagacious, at the same time, to discern his true interest, and influenced by that alone, he was capable of pursuing it with a perfevering industry, and of adhering to it with a systematic spirit from which no object could divert, and no danger could deter him.

THE maxims of his administration were as profound as they His mensures were fatal to the privileges of the nobility. He filled all the de-

for humbling

Vol. I.

partments

Histoire de France par Velly & Villaret, tom. xv. 331, &c. 389. tom. xvi. 324. Variations de la Monarchie Francoise, tom. iii. 162.

4

SECT. II. partments of government with new men, and often with persons, whom he called from the lowest as well as most despised functions in life, and raifed at pleasure to stations of great power or trust. These were his only confidents, whom he consulted in forming his plans, and to whom he committed the execution of them: While the nobles, accustomed to be the companions, the favourites, and the ministers of their fovereigns, were treated with fuch studied and mortifying neglect, that if they would not submit to follow a court, in which they appeared without any shadow of their ancient power, they were obliged to retire to their castles, where they remained unemployed and for-Not fatisfied with having rendered the nobles of less confideration, by taking out of their hands the fole direction of affairs, Louis added infult to neglect; and by violating their most valuable privileges, endeavoured to degrade the order, and to reduce the members of it to the same level with other subjects. Persons of the highest rank among them, if so bold as to oppose his schemes, or so unfortunate as to awaken the jealousy of his capricious temper, were profecuted with rigour, from which all who belonged to the order of nobles had hitherto been exempt; they were tried by judges who had no right to take cognizance of their actions; and were subjected to torture, or condemned to an infamous death, without regard to their birth or condition. people, accustomed to see the blood of the most illustrious personages shed by the hands of the common executioner, to behold them shut up in dungeons, and carried about in cages of iron, began to view the nobility with less reverence than formerly, and looked up with terror to the royal authority, which feemed to have humbled or annihilated every other power in the kingdom.

AT the same time, Louis, being afraid that opposition might SECT. IL rouze the nobles, whom the rigour of his government had intimidated, or that felf-preservation might teach them, at last, to unite, dexterously scattered among them the seeds of discord; and industriously fomented those ancient animosities between the great families, which the spirit of jealousy and emulation, natural to the feudal government, had originally kindled and flill kept alive. To accomplish this, all the arts of intrigue, all the mysteries and refinements of his fraudulent policy were employed, and with fuch fuccess, that at a juncture which required the most strenuous efforts, as well as the most perfect union, the nobles never acted, except during one short fally of resentment at the beginning of his reign, either with vigour or with consert. and an explanation of the base to below viding them.

As he stripped the nobility of their privileges, he added to the He adds to power and prerogative of the crown. In order to have at com- flanding mand fuch a body of foldiers as might be fufficient to crush any force that his disaffected subjects could draw together, he not only kept on foot the regular troops which his father had raised, but took into his pay six thousand Swiss, the best disciplined and most formidable infantry, at that time, in Europe'. From the jealoufy natural to tyrants, he confided in these foreign mercenaries, as the most devoted instruments of oppression, and the most faithful guardians of the power which he had acquired.

the number of forces.

GREAT funds were requisite, not only to defray the expence He augments of this additional establishment, but to supply the sums employed in the various enterprizes which the reflless activity of his genius prompted him to undertake. But the prerogative that his

of the crown.

Mem. de Comines, tom. i. 367. Dan. Hift. de la Milice Francoise, tom. i. 182. O 2 father SECT. II. father had assumed of levying taxes, without the concurrence of the states-general, which he was careful not only to retain but to extend, enabled him to provide in some measure for the increasing charges of government.

His address in managing the assembly of states.

WHAT his prerogative, enlarged as it was, could not furnish, his address procured. He was the first monarch in Europe who discovered the method of managing those great assemblies, in which the feudal policy had vested the power of granting subsidies and of impoling taxes. He first taught other Princes the fatal art of beginning their attack on publick liberty, by corrupting the fource from which it flowd flow. By exerting all his power and address in influencing the election of representatives, by bribing or overawing the members, and by various changes which he artfully made in the form of their deliberations, Louis acquired such entire direction of these assemblies, that, from being the vigilant guardians of the privileges and property of the people, he rendered them tamely subfervient, in promoting the most odious measures of his reign. As no power remained to fct bounds to his exactions, he not only continued all the taxes imposed by his father, but made immense additions to them, which amounted to a fum that appeared aftonishing to his contemporaries '. *

⁴ Mcm. de Comin. tom. i. 136. Chron. Scandal. ibid. tom. ii. p. 71.

Mem. de Com. tom. i. 334.

^{*} Charles VII. levied taxes to the amount of 1,800,000 francs; Louis XI. raifed 4,700,000. The former had in pay 9000 cavalry and 16,000 infantry. The latter augmented the cavalry to 15,000, and the infantry to 25,000. Mem. de Comines, i. 384. During the latter years of his reign, he kept the greater part of these encamped in one place, and ready to march on the shortest warning. Ibid. 381.

Nor was it the power alone or wealth of the crown that Louis Sect. IL increased; he extended its territories by acquisitions of various kinds. He got possession of Rousillon by purchase; Provence was conveyed to him by the will of Charles de Anjou; and upon the death of Charles the Bold, he feized with a strong hand Burgundy and Artois, which had belonged to that Prince. Thus, during the course of a single reign, France was formed into one compact kingdom, and the steady unrelenting policy of Louis XI. not only subdued the haughty spirit of the feudal nobles, but established a species of government, scarce less absolute, or less terrible, than eastern despotism.

He enlarges the bounds of the French monarchy,

But fatal as his administration was to the liberties of his sub- By all these jects, the authority which he acquired, the resources of which he became mafter, and his freedom from restraint both in concerting his plans and in executing them, rendered his reign active and enterprizing. Louis negociated in all the courts of Europe; he observed the motions of all his neighbours; he engaged, either as principal, or as an auxiliary, in every great transaction; his resolutions were prompt; his operations vigorous; and upon every emergence he could call forth into action the whole force of his kingdom. From the æra of his reign, instead of the feeble efforts of monarchs fettered and circumferibed by a jealous nobility, the Kings of France, more masters at home, have exerted themselves more abroad, have formed more extensive schemes of foreign conquests, and have carried on war with a spirit and vigour long unknown in Europe.

the French government rendere d more active and enterprizing.

THE example which Louis fet was too inviting not to be Steps taken imitated by other Princes. Henry VII. as foon as he was towar1 extending the feated power of the crown in England.

SECT. II. feated on the throne of England, formed the plan of enlarging his own prerogative, by breaking the power of the nobility. The circumstances under which he undertook to execute it, were less favourable than those under which Charles VII. had made the same attempt; and the spirit with which he conducted it, was very different from that of Louis XI. Charles, by the success of his arms against the English, by the merit of having expelled them out of so many provinces, had established himself so firmly in the confidence of his people, as encouraged him to make bold encroachments on the ancient constitution. The daring genius of Louis broke through every barrier, and endeavoured to overturn or to remove every obstacle that stood in his way. But Henry held the sceptre by a disputed title; a popular faction was ready every moment to take arms against him; and after long civil wars, during which the nobility had often displayed their power in creating and deposing Kings, he felt that the regal authority had been so much relaxed, and that he entered into possession of a prerogative so much abridged, as made it necessary to carry on his measures deliberately, and without any violent exertion. He endeavoured to undermine that formidable structure, which he durst not attack with open force. His schemes, though cautious and slow in their operation, were prudent, and productive in the end of great effects. By his laws, permitting the barons to break the entails of their effates, and to expose them to fale; by his regulations to prevent the nobility from keeping in their fervice those numerous bands of retainers, which rendered them formidable, and turbulent; by encouraging population, agriculture and commerce; by fecuring to his fubjects, during a long reign, the enjoyment of the bleffings which flow from the arts of peace; by accustoming them to an administration nistration of government, under which the laws were executed SECT. II. with steadiness and vigour; he made imperceptibly such alterations in the English constitution, that he transmitted to his succeffor authority fo extensive, as rendered him one of the most absolute Monarchs in Europe, and capable of the greatest and most vigorous efforts.

In Spain, the union of all its crowns by the marriage of Fer- And in Spain; dinand and Isabella; the glory that they acquired by the conquest of Granada, which brought the odious dominion of the Moors to a period; the command of the great armies which it had been necessary to keep constantly on foot, in order to accomplish this; the wisdom and steadiness of their administration; and the address with which they availed themselves of every incident to humble the nobility, and to extend their own prerogative, conspired in raising these monarchs to such eminence and authority, as none of their predecessors had ever enjoyed. Though feveral causes, which shall be explained in another place, prevented their attaining the same extensive powers with the Kings of France and England, and preferved the feudal conflitution in Spain longer entire, their great abilities supplied the defects of their prerogative, and improved with fuch dexterity all the advantages which they possessed, that Ferdinand carried on all his foreign operations, which were very extensive, with extraordinary vigour and effect.

WHILE these Princes were thus enlarging the boundaries of Events happrerogative, and taking fuch steps towards rendering their kingdoms capable of acting with union and with force, events occurred, which called them forth to exert the new powers which pened, which called the feveral monarchs to exert the new powe ers which they had agthey quired.

SECT. II.

they had acquired. These engaged them in such a series of enterprizes and negociations, that the affairs of all the considerable nations in Europe came to be insensibly interwoven with each other; and a great political system was gradually formed, which grew to be an object of universal attention.

The first of these events was the marriage of the heires of the house of Bargundy.

THE first event which merits notice, on account of its influence in producing this change in the state of Europe, was the marriage of the daughter of Charles the Bold, the sole heires of the house of Burgundy. For some years before her father's death, she had been considered as the apparent successor to his territories, and Charles had made proposals of marrying her to several different Princes, with a view of alluring them, by that offer, to savour the schemes which his restless ambition was continually forming.

The importance of this to the state of Europe.

This rendered the alliance with her an object of general attention; and all the advantages of acquiring possession of her territories, the met opulent at that time and best cultivated of any on this side of the Alps, were perfectly understood. As soon, then, as the untimely death of Charles opened the succession, the eyes of all the Princes in Europe were turned towards Mary, and they felt themselves deeply interested in the choice which she was about to make of the person, on whom she would bestow that rich inheritance.

A D. 1477. Janu. ry 5.

Views of Louis XI. with respect stoit. Louis XI. from whose kingdom several of the provinces which she possessed had been disnembered, and whose dominions stretched along the frontier of her territories, had every inducement to court her alliance. He had, likewise, a good tiste to expect he should make, with respect to the disposal of a Princess; who was the vasfal of his crown, and descended from the royal blood There were only two propositions, however, which of France. he could make with propriety. The one was the marriage of the Dauphin, the other that of the Count of Angouleme, a Prince of the blood, with the heiress of Burgundy. By the former, he would have annexed all her territories to his crown, and have rendered France at once the most respectable monarchy in Europe. But the great disparity of age between the two parties, Mary being twenty, and the Dauphin only eight years old; the avowed resolution of the Flemings, not to chuse a master posfessed of such power as might enable him to form schemes dangerous to their liberties; together with their draid of falling under the odious and oppressive government of Louis, were obstacles in the way of executing this plan, which it was vain to think of fur-By the latter, the accomplishment of which might mounting.

expect the favourable reception of any reasonable proposition SECT. II.

have been attained with ease, Mary having discovered some inclination to a match with the Count of Angouleme', Louis would have prevented the dominions of the house of Burgundy from being conveyed to a rival power, and in return for such a splendid establishment for the Count of Angouleme, he must have obtained, or would have extorted from him concessions highly beneficial to the crown of France. But Louis had been accustomed so long to the intricacies of a crooked and insidious policy, that he could not be satisfied with what was obvious and simple; and was so fond of artifice and resinement, that he came to consider these as his ultimate object, not as the means only of conducting assairs. From this principle, no less than from his unwillingness to aggrandize any SECT. II. of his own subjects, or from his desire of oppressing the house of Burgundy, which he hated, he neglected the course which a Prince less able and artful would have taken, and followed one more suited to his own genius.

The fingular course which he followed.

HE proposed to render himself master, by force of arms, of those provinces, which Mary held of the crown of France, and even to push his conquests into her other territories, while he amused her with insisting continually on the impracticable match with the Dauphin. In profecuting this plan, he displayed wonderful talents and industry, and exhibited such scenes of treachery, falsehood and cruelty, as are amazing even in the history of Louis XI. Immediately upon the death of Charles, he put his troops in motion, and advanced towards the Netherlands. He corrupted the leading men in the provinces of Burgundy and Artois, and seduced them to desert their sovereign. got admission into some of the frontier towns by bribing the governors; the gates of others were opened to him in consequence of his intrigues with the inhabitants. He negociated with Mary; and, in order to render her odious to her subjects, hebetrayed to them her most important secrets. He carried on a private correspondence with the two ministers whom she chiefly trusted, and then communicated the letters which he had received from them to the states of Flanders, who, enraged at their perfidy, brought them immediately to trial, tortured them. with most extreme cruelty, and, unmoved by the tears and intreaties of their fovereign, who knew and approved of all that the ministers had done, they beheaded them in her presence.

⁸ Mem. de Comines. liv. v. ch. 15. p. 309, &c.

WHILE Louis, by this conduct, unworthy of a great monarch, Sect. II. was fecuring the possession of Burgundy, Artois, and the towns on the Somme, the states of Flanders carried on a negociation with the Emperor Frederick III. and concluded a treaty of marriage between their fovereign and his fon Maximilian, Archduke of Austria. The illustrious birth of that Prince, as well as the high dignity of which he had the prospect, rendered the alliance honourable for Mary, while, from the distance of his hereditary territories, and the scantiness of his revenues, his power was so inconfiderable as did not excite the jealoufy or fear of the Flemings.

The effect of this, the marriage of Maximilian with the heires of Burgundy. A. D. 1477.

Thus Louis, by the caprice of his temper, and the excess of The influence his refinements, put the house of Austria in possession of this the state of noble inheritance. By this acquisition, the foundation of the future grandeur of Charles V. was laid; and he became master of those territories, which enabled him to carry on his most formidable and decisive operations against France. Thus, too, the same monarch who first united the interior force of France, and established it on such a footing as to render it formidable to the rest of Europe, contributed, far contrary to his intention, to raise up a rival power, which, during two centuries, has thwarted the measures, opposed the arms, and checked the progress of his successors.

of that on Europe.

THE next event of consequence in the fifteenth century, was the expedition of Charles VIII. into Italy. This occasioned revolutions no less memorable; produced alterations, which were more immediately perceived, both in the military and political fystem; rouzed the states of Europe to bolder efforts; and blended their affairs and interests more closely together. The

The next confiderable event was the invasion of Italy by Charles VIII. A. D. 1494.

The motives of this.

SECT. II. mild administration of Charles, a weak but generous Prince. scems to have revived the spirit and genius of the French nation, which the rigid despotism of his father had depressed, and almost extinguished. The ardour for military service, natural to the French nobility, returned, and their young monarch was impatient to distinguish his reign by some splendid enterprize. While he was uncertain towards what quarter he should turn his arms. the follicitations and intrigues of an Italian politician, no less infamous on account of his crimes, than eminent for his abilities, determined his choice. Ludovico Sforza, having formed the defign of deposing his nephew the duke of Milan, and of placing. himself on the ducal throne, was so much afraid of a combination of the Italian powers to thwart this measure, and to support the injured Prince, with whom most of them were connected by blood or alliance, that he faw the necessity of securing the aid of some able protector. The King of France was the person to whom he applied; and without disclosing to him his own intentions, he laboured to prevail with him to march into Italy, at the head of a powerful army, in order to seize the crown of Naples, to which he had pretentions as heir of the house of The right to that kingdom, claimed by the Angevin Anjou. family, had been conveyed to Louis XI. by Charles of Anjou, But that fagacious monarch, count of Maine and Provence. though he took immediate possession of those territories of which Charles was really master, totally disregarded his ideal title to a kingdom, over which another Prince reigned in tranquillity; and uniformly declined involving himself in the labyrinth of Italian politicks. His fon, more adventurous, or more inconfiderate, embarked eagerly in this enterprize; and contemning all all the remonstrances of his most experienced counsellors, pre- Sect. IL pared to carry it on with the utmost vigour.

CHARLES wanted not power equal to fuch a great undertak- His resources ing. His father had transmitted to him such an ample prero- prize. gative, as gave him the entire command of his kingdom. He himself had added considerably to the extent of his dominions, by his prudent marriage with the heiress of Bretagne, which rendered him master of that province, the last of the great fiefs that remained to be annexed to the crown. He foon affembled: forces which he thought sufficient; and so impatient was he to enter on his career as a conqueror, that facrificing what was real, for what was chimerical, he restored Rousillon to Ferdinand, and gave up part of his father's acquisitions in Artois to Maximilian, with a view of inducing these Princes not to molest. France, while he was carrying on his operations in Italy.

BUT so different were the efforts of the States of Europe in His preparathe fifteenth century, from those which we shall behold in the course of this history, that the army, with which Charles undertook this great enterprize, did not exceed twenty thousand men. The train of artillery, however, the ammunition, and warlike stores of every kind provided for its use, were so great as to bear fome refemblance to the immense apparatus of modern war *.

WHEN the French entered Italy, they met with nothing able Its success. The Italian powers having remained, during a long period, undiffurbed by the invation of any foreign enemy, SECT. II. had formed a system with respect to their affairs, both in peace and war, peculiar to themselves. In order to adjust the interests. and balance the power of the different states into which Italy was divided, they were engaged in perpetual and endless negociations with each other, which they conducted with all the subtlety of a refining and deceitful policy. Their contests in the field, when they had recourse to arms, were decided in mock battles, by innocent and bloodless victories. Upon the first appearance of the danger which now impended, they had recourse to the arts which they had studied, and employed their utmost skill in intrigue in order to avert it. But this proving ineffectual, their effeminate mercenaries, the only military force that remained in the country, being fit only for the parade of fervice, were terrified at the aspect of real war, and shrunk at its approach. petuofity of the French valour appeared to them irrefistible. Florence, Pifa, and Rome opened their gates as the French army advanced. The prospect of this dreadful invasion struck one King of Naples with fuch panic terror, that he died (if we may believe historians) of the fright. Another abdicated his throne from the same pusillanimous spirit. A third fled out of his dominions, as foon as the enemy appeared on the Neapolitan frontiers. Charles, after marching thither from the bottom of the Alps, with as much rapidity, and almost as little opposition, as if he had been on a progress through his own dominions, took quiet possession of the throne of Naples, and intimidated or gave law to every power in Italy.

Its effects, particularly in giving rife to the fystem concerning a balance of power.

Such was the conclusion of this expedition, which must be confidered as the first great exertion of those new powers which the Princes of Europe had acquired, and now began to exercise.

Its effects were no less considerable than its success had been SECT. IL. astonishing. The Italians, unable to resist the impression of the enemy which broke in upon them, permitted him to hold on his course undisturbed. They quickly perceived that no fingle power, which they could rouze to action, was an equal matchfor a monarch, who ruled over fuch extensive territories, and was at the head of such a martial people; but that a confederacy might accomplish what the separate members of it durst not attempt. To this expedient, the only one that remained to deliver or to preserve them from the yoke, they had recourse. While Charles inconfiderately wasted his time at Naples, in festivals and triumphs on account of his past successes, or was fondly dreaming of future conquests in the East, to the empire of which he now aspired, they formed against him a powerful combination of almost all the Italian states, supported by the Emperor Maximilian, and Ferdinand King of Aragon. union of so many powers, who suspended or forgot all their particular animofities, that they might act with concert against an enemy who had become formidable to them all, awakened Charles from his thoughtless fecurity. He saw now no profpect of fafety but in returning to France. An army of thirty thousand men, assembled by the allies, was ready to obstruct his march; and though the French, with a daring courage, which more than counterbalanced their inferiority in number, broke through that great body, and gained a victory, which opened to their monarch a fafe passage into his own territories, he was stripped of all his conquests in Italy in as short a time as it had. cost him to acquire them; and the political system in that country refumed the same appearance as before his invasion.

Тне

This becomes the great object of pol cy, first in Italy, and then in Europe.

THE fudden and decifive effect of this confederacy feems to have instructed the Princes and statesmen of Italy as much, as the irruption of the French had disconcerted and alarmed them. They had now extended to the affairs of Europe, the maxims of that political fcience which had hitherto been applied only to regulate the operations of the petty states in their own country. They had discovered the method of preventing any monarch from rifing to fuch a degree of power, as was inconsistent with the general liberty; and had manifested the importance of attending to that great fecret in modern policy, the preservation of a proper distribution of power among all the members of the fyshem into which the states of Europe are formed. During all the wars of which Italy now became the theatre, and amidst the hostile operations which the imprudence of Louis XII. and the ambition of Ferdinand of Aragon, carried on in that country, with little interruption, from the close of the fifteenth century, to that period at which the subsequent history commences, the maintaining a proper balance of power between the contending parties became the great object of attention to the statesmen of Italy. Nor was the idea confined to them. Self-preservation taught other powers to adopt it. It grew to be fashionable and universal. From this ara we can trace the progress of that intercourse between nations, which has linked the powers of Europe so closely together; and can discern the operations of that provident policy, which, during peace, guards against remote and contingent dangers; which, in war, hath prevented rapid and destructive conquests.

The wars in Italy render standing armies general. This was not the only effect of the operations which the great powers of Europe carried on in Italy. They contributed to render such a change, as the French had begun to make in the state state of their troops, general; and obliged all the Princes, who SECT. II. appeared on this new theatre of action, to establish the military force of their kingdoms on the same footing with that of France. When the feat of war came to be remote from the countries which maintained the contest, the service of the feudal vasfals ceased to be of any use; and the necessity of employing troops regularly trained to arms, and kept in constant pay, came at once to be evident. When Charles marched into Italy, his cavalry was entirely composed of those companies of Gendarmes, embodied by Charles VII. and continued by Louis XI. his infantry confisted partly of Swiss, hired of the cantons, and partly of Gascons, armed and disciplined after the Swiss model. To these Louis XII. added a body of Germans, well known in the wars of Italy by the name of the Black Bands. But neither of these monarchs made any account of the feudal militia, or ever had recourse to that military force which they might have commanded, in virtue of the ancient institutions in their kingdom. Maximilian and Ferdinand, as foon as they began to act in Italy, employed the same instruments, and trusted the execution of their plans entirely to mercenary troops.

This innovation in the military fystem was quickly followed by another, which the custom of employing Swiss in the Italian wars, was the occasion of introducing. The arms and discipline of the Swiss were different from those of other European nations. During their long and violent struggles in desence of their liberties against the house of Austria, whose armies, like those of other considerable Princes, consisted chiefly of heavy armed cavalry, the Swiss found that their poverty, and the small number of gentlemen residing in their country, at that time barren and uncultivated, put it out of their power to bring

Teach the Europeans the fuperior importance of infantry in ware

Vol. I. Q into

SECT. II. into the field any body of horse capable of facing the enemy. Necessity compelled them to place all their confidence in infantry; and in order to render it capable of withstanding the shock of cavalry, they gave the foldiers breast-plates and helmets as defenfive armour; together with long spears, halberts, and heavy swords as weapons of offence. They formed them into large battalions, ranged in deep and close array, so as to present on every side a formidable front to the enemy. The men at arms could make no impression on the solid strength of such a body. It repulsed the Austrians in all their attempts to conquer Swisserland. It broke the Burgundian Gendarmerie, which was scarce inferior to that of France, either in number or reputation: And when first called to act in Italy, it bore down by its irrefiftible force every enemy that attempted to oppose it. These repeated proofs of the decifive effect of infantry, exhibited on fuch conspicuous occasions, restored that service to reputation, and gradually reestablished the opinion, which had been long exploded, of its fuperior importance in the operations of war. But the glory which the Swifs had acquired, having inspired them with such high ideas of their own prowess and consequence, as rendered them mutinous and infolent, the Princes who employed them became weary of depending on the caprice of foreign mercenaries, and began to turn their attention towards the improvement of their national infantry.

National infantry ellablished in Germany.

THE German powers having the command of men, whom nature has endowed with that steady courage, and persevering ftrength, which forms them to be foldiers, foon modelled their troops in such a manner, that they vied with the Swiss both in discipline and valour.

Machiavel Art of War, b. ii, chap. ii. p. 451.

THE French monarchs, though more flowly, and with greater Sect. II difficulty, accustomed the impetuous spirit of their people to sub- In France. ordination and discipline; and were at such pains to render their national infantry respectable, that as early as the reign of Louis XII. several gentlemen of high rank had so far abandoned their ancient ideas, as to condescend to enter into that service!.

THE Spaniards, whose situation made it difficult to employ any In Spain. other than their national troops, in the fouthern parts of Italy, which was the chief scene of their operations in that country, not only adopted the Swiss discipline, but improved upon it, by mingling a proper number of foldiers armed with heavy muskets in their battalions; and thus formed that famous body of infantry, which, during a century and a half, was the admiration and terror of all Europe. The Italian states gradually diminished the number of their cavalry, and, in imitation of their more powerful neighbours, brought the strength of their armies to consist in foot foldiers. From this period the nations of Europe have carried on war with forces more adapted to every species of service, more capable of acting in every country, and better fitted both for making conquests, and for preserving them.

As their efforts in Italy led the people of Europe to these im- The Italian provements in the art of war, they gave them likewise the first an increase of idea of the expence which accompanies great and continued operations, and accustomed them to the burden of those imposi- Europe. tions, which are necessary for supporting them. While the feudal policy subsisted in full vigour, while armies were composed of military vassals called forth to attack some neighbour-wars occasion the publick revenues in'

Brantome, tom. x. p. 18. Mem. de Fleuranges, 143.

SECT. II. ing power, and to perform, in a short campaign, the services which they owed to their fovereign, the expence of war was extremely moderate. A fmall fubfidy enabled a Prince to begin and to finish his greatest operations. But when Italy became the theatre on which the powers of Europe contended for superiority, the preparations requisite for such a distant expedition, the pay of armies kept constantly on foot, their subsistance in a foreign country, the fieges to be undertaken, and the towns to be defended, fwelled the charges of war immensely, and by creating demands unknown in less active times, multiplied taxes in every kingdom. The progress of ambition, however, was so rapid, and Princes extended their operations fo fast, that it was impossible at first to establish funds proportional to the increase of expence which these occasioned. When Charles VIII. invaded Naples, the sums requisite for carrying on that enterprize fo far exceeded those which France had been accustomed to contribute, that before he reached the frontiers of Italy, his treasury was exhausted, and the domestick resources, of which his extensive prerogative gave him the command, were at an end. As he durst not venture to lay any new imposition on his people, oppressed already with the weight of unusual burdens; the only expedient that remained was, to borrow of the Genoese as much money as would enable him to continue his march. But he could not obtain the fum that was requifite, without confenting to pay annually the exorbitant interest of forty-two livres for every hundred that he received k. We may observe the same disproportion between the efforts and revenues of other Princes, his contemporaries. From this period, taxes went on increasing; and during the reign of Charles V. such fums were levied in every state, as would have appeared prodi- Sect. II. gious at the close of the fifteenth century, and gradually prepared the way for the more exorbitant exactions of modern times.

^{*} Mem. de Comines, lib. vii. c. 5. p. 440.

merits attention on account of its influence upon the state of Europe, is the league of Cambray. To humble the republick of tant occur-Venice, and to divide its territories, was the object of all the powers who united in this confederacy. The civil constitution of Venice, established on a firm basis, had suffered no considerable alteration for feveral centuries; during which, the state conducted its affairs by maxims of policy no less prudent than vigorous, and adhered to these, with an uniform consistent spirit, which gave that commonwealth great advantage over other states, whose views and measures changed as often as the form of their government, or the persons who administered it. these unintermitted exertions of wisdom and valour, the Venetians enlarged the dominions of their commonwealth, until it became the most considerable power in Italy. While their extensive commerce, the useful and curious manufactures which they carried on, together with their monopoly of the precious commodities of the East, rendered Venice the most opulent

THE last transaction, previous to the reign of Charles V. that The league of Cambray another impor-

THEIR power was the object of terror to their Italian neigh- The motives Their wealth was viewed with envy by the greatest monarchs, who could not vie with their private citizens in the magnificence of their buildings, in the richness of their dress and furniture, or in splendor and elegance of living'.

state in Europe.

¹ Heliani oratio apud Goldastum in polit. Imperial. p. 980.

SECT. II. Julius II. whose ambition was superior, and his abilities equal, to those of any Pontiff who ever sat on the Papal throne, formed the idea of this league against the Venetians, and endeavoured, by applying to these passions which I have mentioned, to persuade other Princes to join in it. By working upon the fears of the' Italian powers, and upon the avarice of the monarchs beyond the Alps, he induced them, in concurrence with other causes, which it is not my province to explain, to form against these haughty republicans one of the most extensive confederacies Europe had ever beheld.

The rapid progress of the confede-Tales.

THE Emperor, the King of Francé, the King of Aragon, the Pope, were principals in the league of Cambray, to which almost all the Prince's of Italy acceded, the least considerable of them hoping for some share in the spoils of a state, which they already deemed to be devoted to destruction. The Venetians might have diverted this storm, or have broken its force; but with a presumptuous rashness, to which there is nothing similar in the course of their history, they waited its approach. The impetuous valour of the French rendered ineffectual all their precautions for the fafety of the republick; and the fatal battle of Ghiarradadda entirely ruined the army, on which they relied for defence. Julius feized all the towns which they held in the ecclefiaftical territories. Ferdinand re-annexed the towns of which they had got possession on the coast of Calabria, to his Neapolitan dominions. Maximilian, at the head of a powerful army, advanced towards Venice on the one fide. The French pushed their conquests on the other. The Venetians, furrounded by fo many enemies, and left without one ally, funk from the height of prefumption to the depths of despair; abandoned all their territories on the continent:

continent; and shut themselves up in their capital, as their last SECT. H. refuge, and the only place which they hoped to preferve.

THIS rapid success, however, proved fatal to the confederacy. Division arises among. The members of it, united while engaged in seizing their prey, them. began to feel their ancient jealoufy and animolities revive, as foon as they had a prospect of dividing it. When the Venetians. observed these symptoms of alienation and distrust, a ray of hope broke in upon them; the spirit natural to their councils returned; they refumed fuch wisdom and firmness, as made some atonement for their former imprudence and dejection; they recovered part of the territory which they had loft; they appealed. the Pope and Ferdinand by well-timed concessions in their favour; and at length dissolved the confederacy, which had brought their commonwealth to the brink of ruin.

JULIUS, elated with beholding the effects of a league which New objects. he himself had planned, and imagining that nothing was too ar- and ambition. duous for him to undertake, conceived the idea of expelling every foreign power out of Italy, and bent all the force of his mind towards executing a scheme so well suited to his vast and enterprizing genius. He directed his first attack against the French, who, on many accounts, were more odious to the Italians, than any of the foreigners who had acquired dominion in their country. By his activity and address, he prevailed on most of the powers, who had joined in the league of Cambray, to turn their arms against the King of France, their former ally; and engaged Henry VIII. who had lately afcended the throne of England, to favour their operations by invading Louis XII. relifted all the efforts of this formi-

SECT. II. dable and unexpected confederacy, with undaunted fortitude. Hostilities were carried on, during several campaigns, in Italy, on the frontiers of Spain, and in Picardy, with alternate success. Exhausted, at length, by the variety as well as extent of his operations; unable to withstand a confederacy which brought against him superior force, conducted with wisdom, and acting with perseverance; he found it necessary to conclude separate treaties of peace with his enemies; and the war terminated with the loss of every thing which the French had acquired in Italy, except the castle of Milan, and a few inconsiderable towns in that dutchy.

By this the intercourse among the European nations increases.

THE various negociations carried on during this bufy period, and the different combinations formed among powers hitherto little connected with each other, greatly increased that intercourse between the nations of Europe, which I have mentioned as one effect of the events in the fifteenth century. While the greatness of the objects at which they aimed, the distant expeditions which they undertook, as well as the length and obstinacy of the contests in which they engaged, obliged them to exert themselves with a vigour and perseverance unknown in the preceding ages.

They are prepared for the transactions of the fixteenth century. THOSE active scenes which the following History will exhibit, and the variety and importance of those transactions which distinguish the period to which it extends, are not to be ascribed solely to the ambition, to the abilities, or to the rivalship of Charles V. and of Francis I. The kingdoms of Europe had arrived at such a degree of improvement in the internal administration of government, and Princes had acquired such command of the national soice which was to be exerted in soreign wars, that they were in a condition to enlarge the sphere of MANY attempts were made by the Popes, not only to humble SECT. HE these usurpers, who lorded it over the cities in the coclesiastical flate, but to break the turbulent ipinit of the Roman people. Their were long unfuccefsful. At last Alexander VI, with a policy no less artful than flagitious, subdued and entirputed mast of them, and rendered the Popes malters of their own doublinkers. enterprizing ambition of Julius II. added conquests of no inconfiderable value to the patricionny of St. Peter: Thus the Poper, by degrees, became powerful temporal Princes. Their territories, in the age of Charles V. were of greater extent than at present; their cor mry was better entirisated, and more population and as they drew large contributions from every part of Europe, their revenucs far exceeded those of the neighbouring powers, and rennered them capable of more fudden and vigorous efforts.

and Julian II.

ere chaff cal Coal ato .

THI genius of the Papal government, however, was better Defens in e e ad polito the exercise of spiritual dominion, than of temporal With respect to the former, all its maxims were fleady and manable. Eve y new Poptiff adopted the plan of his predecefor. By education and habit Ecclefialnes were to formed, that the character of the individual was funk in that of the pro-I then; and the pallions of the man were factificed to the interest and honour of the order. The hands which held the reins of administration might change; but the spirit which conducted them was always the lame. While the measures of other governments fluctuated, and the empels at which they aimed viried, the church kept one and in view; and to this unrelaxing constancy of purinit, it was indebted for its nuccess in the boldest attempts ever made by human inbition.

S

SECT. III.

But in their civil administration, the Pepes followed no such uniform or consistent plan. There, as in other governments, the character, the passions, and the interests of the person who had the supreme direction of assairs, occasioned a variation both in objects and measures. As sew Prelates reached the summit of ecclesiastical dignity, until they were far advanced in life, a change of masters was more frequent in the Papal dominions than in other states, and the political system was, of course, less stable and permanent. Every Pope was eager to make the most of the short period, during which he had the prospect of enjoying power, in order to aggrandize his family, and to attain his private ends; and it was often the first business of his successor to undo all that he had done, and to overturn what he had established.

As ecclefiafticks were trained to pacifick arts, and early initiated in the mysteries of that policy, by which the court of Rome extended or supported its spiritual dominion, the Popes were apt to conduct their temporal affairs with the same spirit; and in all their measures were more ready to employ the refinements of intrigue, than the force of arms. It was in the Papal court that address and subtlety in negociation first became a science; and during the sixteenth century, Rome was considered as the school in which it could be best acquired.

As the decorum of their ecclesiastical character prevented the Popes from placing themselves at the head of their armies, or taking the command, in person, of the military force in their dominions, they were assaid to arm their subjects; and in all their operations, whether offensive or defensive, they trusted entirely to mercenary troops.

As their power and dominions could not descend to their SECT. III. posterity, the Popes were less follicitous than other Princes to form or to encourage schemes of publick utility and improvement. Their tenure was only for a short life; present advantage was all that they attended to; to squeeze and to amais, not to meliorate, was their object. They crected, perhaps, some work of oftentation, to remain as a monument of their Pontificate: they found it necessary, at some times, to establish uleful institutions, in order to footh and filence the turbulent populace of Rome; but plans of general benefit to their subjects, and framed with a view to futurity, were rarely objects of attention in the Papal policy. The patrimony of St. Peter was worse governed than any part of Europe; and though a generous Pontiff might suspend for a little, or counter-act the effects of those vices which are peculiar to the administration of ecclesiasticks; the disease not only remained incurable, but has even gone on increating from age to age; and the decline of the state has kept pace with its progrefs.

One circumstance, farther, concerning the Papal government, is so singular, as to merit attention. As the spiritual supremacy and temporal power were united in one person, and uniformly aided each other in their operations, they became so blended together, that it was difficult to separate them, even in imagination. The potentates who found it necessary to oppose the measures which the Popes pursued as temporal Princes, could not divest themselves of the reverence which they imagined to be due to them as heads of the church, and vicars of Jesus Christ. It was with reluctance that they could be brought to a rupture with them; they were averse to push their operations against them to extremity; they listened eagerly to the first overtures of ac-

The Poprs derive force advantages from the union of their fpiritual and temporal authority.

SECT.III. commodation, and were willing to procure it almost upon any Their confeiousness of this encouraged the enterprizing terms. Pentiffs, who filled the Papal throne about the beginning of the fixteenth century, to engage in schemes seemingly the most extravagant. They trufted, that if their temporal power was rect fufficient to carry them through with fuccess, the respect paid to their spiritual dignity would enable them to extricate themselves with facility and with honour. But when Popes came to take part more frequently in the contests among Princes, and to engage as principals or auxiliaries in every war kindled in Europe, this veneration for their facred character began to abate; and striking instances will occur in the following history, of its being almost totally extinct.

Corff turion of the repubheli of Verice, with its rife and progreß.

Or all the Italian powers, the republick of Venice, next to the Pope, was most connected with the rest of Europe.

"The manner in which Louis XII. of France undertook and carried on war against Julius II. remarkably illustrates this observation. Louis solemnly cor-. fulted the clergy of France, whether it was lawful to take arms against a Pope, who had wantonly kindled war in Europe, and whom neither the faith of treaties, nor gratitude for favours received, nor the decorum of his character, could reftrain from the most violent actions, to which the lust of power prompts ambitious Princes. Though his clergy authorized the war, yet Anne of Bretagne, his Queen, entertained a ruples with regard to the lawfulness of it. The King himfelf, from some superflition of the same kind, carried it on faintly; and, upon every fresh advantage, renewed his propositions of peace. Mezeray, Hist. de France, fol. edit. 1685, tom. i. 852. I shall produce another proof of this reverence for the Papal character fill more fliking. Guiceisidini, the most fagacious, perhaps, of all a odern hiflorians, and the boldoft in painting the vices and ambition of the Popes, reprefents the death of Migliau, a Spanish officer, who was killed during the fiege of Naples, as a quaiffunent inflicted on him by heaven, on account of his having apposed the fetting of Clement VII. at liberty. Guic. Historia d'Ita-Has Genev. 1645 vol. u. Ib. 18, p. 467.

of that commonwealth, during the inroads of the Huns in the SECT. IH. fifth century; the fingular fituation of its capital in the fmall isles of the Adriatick gulf; and the more fingular form of its civil constitution, are generally known. If we view the Venetian government as calculated for the order of nobles alone, its inftitutions are so excellent; the deliberative, legislative and executive powers are so admirably distributed and adjusted, that it must be regarded as a perfect model of political wisdom. if we confider it as formed for a numerous body of people subject to its jurisdiction, it will appear a rigid and partial ariflocracy, which lodges all power in the hands of a few members of the community, while it degrades and oppresses the rest.

> Deseels in its: government. particularly with respect to its military

THE spirit of government, in a commonwealth of this species, was, of course, timid and jealous. The Venetian nobles distrusted their own subjects, and were afraid of allowing them the use of arms. They encouraged among them the operations. arts of industry and commerce; they employed them in manufactures and in navigation; but never admitted them into the troops which the state kept in its pay. The military force of the republick confished entirely of foreign mercenaries. The command of these was never trusted to noble Venetians, lest they should acquire such influence over the army, as might endanger the publick liberty; or become accustomed to the exercife of fuch power, as would make them unwilling to return to the condition of private citizens. A foldier of fortune was placed at the head of the armics of the commonwealth; and to obtain that honour, was the great object of the Italian Condottieri, or leaders of bands, who, in the fifteenth and fixteenth centuries, made a trade of war, and raifed and hired out foldiers to different states. But the same suspicious policy, which induced.

them.

SECT. III. them to employ these adventurers, prevented their placing entire confidence in them. Two noblemen, appointed by the fenate, accompanied their army when it took the field, with the appellation of Proveditori, and like the field-deputies of the Dutch republick in later times, observed all the motions of the general, and checked and controuled him in all his operations.

> A REPUBLICE, with such civil and military institutions, was not formed to make conquests. While its subjects were disarmed, and its nobles excluded from military command, it carried on its warlike enterprizes with great disadvantage. This ought to have taught the Venetians to make felf-preservation, and the enjoyment of domestick fecurity, the objects of their policy. But republicks are apt to be feduced by the spirit of ambition, as well as Princes. When the Venetians to far forgot the interior defects in their government, as to aim at extensive conquests, the fatal blow, which they received in the war excited by the league of Cambray, convinced them of the imprudence and danger of making violent efforts, in opposition to the genius and tendency of their constitution.

Excel'ence of its naval infitutions.

IT is not, however, by its military, but by its naval and commercial power, that the importance of the Venetian commonwealth must be estimated. In the latter, the real force and nerves of the state confisted. The jealoufy of government did not extend to this department. Nothing was apprehended from this quarter, that could prove formidable to liberty. The fenate encouraged the nobles to trade, and to ferve on board the fleet. They became merchants and admirals. They encreased the wealth of their country by their industry. They added to its dominions, dominions, by the valour with which they conducted its naval SECT. III. armaments.

The extent of

THE Venetian commerce was an inexhaustible source of opulence. All the nations in Europe depended upon them, not only for the commodities of the East, but for various manufactures fabricated by them alone, or finished with a dexterity and elegance unknown in other countries. From this extensive commerce, the state derived such immense supplies, as concealed these vices in its constitution, which I have mentioned; and enabled it to keep on foot such armies, as were not only an over-match for the force which any of its neighbours could bring into the field, but were fufficient to contend, for fome time, with the powerful monarchs beyond the Alps. During its struggles with the Princes united against it by the league of Cambray, the republick levied fums which, even in the prefent age, would be deemed considerable; and while the King of France paid the exorbitant interest which I have mentioned for the money advanced to him, and the Emperor eager to borrow, but destitute of credit, was known by the name of Maximilian the Money-less, the Venetians raised whatever fums they pleased, at the moderate premium of five in the hundred.

THE constitution of Florence was perfectly the reverse of that The constituof Venice. It partook as much of the democratical turbulence rence. and licenticulness, as the other of aristocratical rigour. rence, however, was a commercial, not a military democracy. The nature of its institutions were favourable to commerce, and Hift, de la ligue faite a Cambray par M. l' Abbé le Bos. lib. v. Sandi. Storia Civil Veneziana, lib. viii. c. 16. p. 891, &c.

SECT. III. the genius of the people was turned towards it. The vaft wealth which the family of Medici had acquired by trade; added to the magnificence, the generofity, and the virtue of the first Coling, gave him fuch an afcendant over the affections as well as the councils of his countrymen, that though the forms of popular government were preserved, though the various departments of administration were filled by magistrates distinguished by the ancient names, and elected in the usual manner, he was in reality the head of the commonwealth, and in the station of a private citizen he possessed supreme authority. Colmo transmitted a considerable degree of this power to his descendants; and during the greater part of the fifteenth century, the political state of Florence was extremely fingular. The appearance of republican government fublisted, the people were passionately attached to it, and on some occasions contended warmly for their privileges, and yet they permitted a fingle family to assume a direction of their affairs, almost as absolute as if it had been formally invested with sovereign power. The jealousy of the Medici concurred with the commercial spirit of the Florentines, in putting the military force of the republick upon the same footing with that of the other Italian states. The troops, which the Florentines employed in their wars, confided almost entirely of mercenary foldiers, furnished by the Condottieri, or leaders of hands, whom they took into their pay.

The conflitution of the kingdom of Naple .

In the kingdom of Naples, to which the fovereignty of the island of Sicily was annexed, the feudal government was established in the same form, and with the same defects, as in the other nations of Europe. The frequent and violent revolutions which happened in that monarchy, had confiderably increased these descets, and rendered them more intolerable. The success-

fion to the crown of Naples had been to often interrupted or Secr. altered, and so many Princes of foreign blood had taken possession of the shape, that the Neapolitan nobility had lost, in a successive, that attachment to the family of their fovereigns, as well as that reverence for their persons, which, in other feudal kingdoms, contributed to fet some bounds to the encroachments of the barons upon the royal prerogative and power. At the same time, the different pretenders to the crown, being . cobliged to court the barons who adhered to them, and on whole support they depended for the success of their claims, they augmented their privileges by liberal concessions, and connived at their boldest usurpations. Even when seated on the throne, it was dangerous for a Prince, who held his fcentre by a disputed title, to venture on any step towards extending his own power, or circumfcribing that of the nobles.

FROM all these causes, the kingdom of Naples was the most turbulent of any in Europe, and the authority of its Monarchs the least extensive. Though Ferdinand I. who began his reign in the year one thousand four hundred and fixty-eight, attempted to break the power of the aristocracy; though his fon Alfonso, that he might crush it at once by cutting off the leaders of greatest reputation and influence among the Neapolitan barons, ventured to commit one of the most persidious and cruel actions recorded in history; the order of nobles was never- A. D. 1487 theless more exasperated than humbled by the blow. The refentment which these outrages excited was so violent, and the power of the malecontent nobles was fill to formidable, that so these may be ascribed, in a great degree, the case and rapidity with which Charles VIII. conquered the kingdom of Naples.

Giannone, book xxviii. chap. 2. vol. ii. p. 410, &cc.

× 38

BECT. III.

time of the stipute conetrains the right of succession to the crown.

A. D. 1254.

THE event that gave rise to the violent contests concerning the fuccession to the crown of Wapies and Sicily, which brought fo many calamities upon these timestimes, nappened in the thirteenth century. Upon the death of the Emperor Frederick II, Manfred his natural fon afpiring to the Weapolines facone. murdered (if we may believe contemporary historians) his twother the Emperor Comad, and by that crime obtained policilion of it. The Popes, from their implacable enmity to the house of Swabia, not only refused to recognize Manfred's title, but endeavoured to excite against him some rival capable of wresting the sceptre out of his hand. Charles Count of Anjour the brother of St. Louis King of France undertook this; and he received from the Popes, the presidere of the kingdom of Naples and Sicily as a fief held of the Holy Sec. The Count of Anjou's efforts were crowned with fuccess; Menfred fell in battle; and he took pollelhon of the vacant throng. But foon after, Charles fullied the glory which he had soquired by the injustice and cruelty with which he put to death, by the hands of the executioner, Conradin, the last Prince of the boute of Swabia, and the rightful heir of the Neapoliten crown. That gallant young Prince afferted his title, to the last, with a courage, worthy of a better fate. On the feaffold, he declared Peter, at that time Prince, and foon after King of Aragon, who hads married Marriced's only daughter, his heir; and thanking his SEC glove sensers suggested be correspond that it might be carried en the second of the shade are conveyed all his rights to Initiation of Capitaline Commission Participation in prompting Peter to take arms at farment of the suit, which he had soquired. From that merica auting about two centuries, the house of Aragonand Anjou contended for the crown of Naples. Amelifica succession of revolutions more rapid, as well as of crimes more amorphis, when what occur in the history of almost any office kingdom, Mouarche tometimes of the Acageneic line, and iometimes of the Angevia were leated on the throne. At length the Princes of the house of Aragon obtained such A.D. firm pollellion of this loss disputed inheritance, that they transmitted it quietly to a balland branch of their family .

[&]amp; Giannone, ibid. p. 414.

^{*} Struv. corp. hist. Germ. i. 481... Giannone, booksevili, ch. 5:

THE race of the Augevin Kings, however, was not extinct; nor had they reliminabled their title to the Neapolitan crown, and Spanish The Count of Maine and Provence, the heir of this family, conveyed all his rights and pretentions to Louis XI, and to his fuccessors. Charles VIII, as I have already related, crossed the A.D. 1494-Albe at the head of a powerful army in order to prolecute his claim with a degree of vigour far superior to that, which the Princes from whom he derived it, had been capable of exerting. The rapid progress of his arms in Italy, as well as the short time during which he enjoyed the fruits of his fuccess, are well known. Frederick the heir of the illegitimate branch of the

Giannone, book xix. ch. 4. § 2.

^{*} Giannone, book xxvi. ch. 2.

SECT. III. Aragonese family, soon recovered the throne of which Charles ! had dispossessed him. Louis XII and Ferdinand of Aranga innited against this Prince, whom both, though for different strates. confidered as an usurper, and agreed to divide his dominion between them. Frederick, unable to relief the combined Manarchs, each of whom was far his superior in power, resigned his fceptre. Louis and Ferdinand, though they had concurred in making the conquest, differed about the division of it; and from allies became enemies. But Gonfalvo de Cordova, partir by the exertion of fuch military talents as gave him a just title to the appellation of the Great Captain, which the Spanish historians have bestowed upon him; and partly by such shameless and frequent violations of the most foleran engagements. as leave an indelible stain on his memory; stripped the French of all that they possessed in the Neapolitan dominions, and secured the peaceable possession of them to his master. together with his other kingdoms, keelinand transmitted to his grandion Charles V, whole right to pollels them, if not altogether uncontravertible, feems, at least, to be as well founded as that, which the Kings of France fet in opposition to it !.

A. D. 1501.

State of the dutchy of Milan, and the right of forcefaon to it.

THERE is nothing in the political conflictation, or interior government of the dutchy of Milan fo remarkable, at to require a particular explanation. But as the right of fuecession to that fertile province was the cause or the pretext of almost all the wars carried on in Italy during the reign of Charles V, it is necessary to trace these disputes to their source, and to inquire into the pretentions of the various competitors.

DURING

Droicts des Rois de France au Royaume de Sicile. Mem. de Comin. Edit. de Fresnoy, tom. iv. partii. p. 5.

DURING the long and fierce contests excited in Italy by the SECT. HL. violence of the Guels and Chibelline factions, the family of Vilocota are to great entirence among their fellow-citizens of Milan. As the Viscone had adhered uniformly to the Ghibelline or Imperial interest, they by way of recompence, received, from one Emperor, the dignity of perpetual vicars of the Empire in Italy". They were created by another, Dukes of Milan, and together with that title, the possession of the city and its A.D. 1395. territories, was bestowed upon them as an hereditary fief". John King of France, among other expedients for railing money, which the calamities of his reign obliged him to employ, condescended to give one of his daughters in marriage to John Galeazzo Visconti the first Duke of Milan, from whom he had received confiderable fuins. Valentine Visconti one of the children of this marriage married her cousin, Louis Duke of Orleans, the only brother of Charles VI. In their marriagecontract which the Pope confirmed, it was stipulated that, upon failure of heirs-male in the family of Visconti, the dutchy of Milan should descend to the posterity of Valentine and the Duke of Orleans. That event took place. In the year one thousand four hundred and forty-seven, Philip Maria the last Prince of the ducal family of Visconti died. Various competitors pretended to the fuccession. Charles Duke of Orleans pleaded his right to it, founded on the marriage-contract of his mother Valentine Visconti. Alfonso King of Naples claimed it in confequence of a will made by Philip Maria in his favour. The Emperor contended that upon the extinction of male issue in the family of Visconti the sicf returned to the

Kife and progreis of the cerning this,

A. D. 1354.

Petrarch epist. ap. Struv. corp. i 625.

[&]quot; Leibnit, cod. jur. gent. diplom. vol. i. 257-

SECT.III. fuperior Lord, and ought to be re-annexed to the Empire. The people of Milan fmitten with that love of liberar which prevailed among the Italian States, declared against the dominion of any master, and established a republican form of government.

BUT during the struggle among so many competitors, the prize for which they contended was feized by one from whom none of them apprehended any danger. Francis Sforza, the natural fon of Jacomuzzo Sforza, whom his courage and abilities had elevated from the rank of a peafant to be one of the most eminent and powerful of the Italian Condottieri, having fucceeded his father in the command of the adventurers who followed his standard, had married a natural daughter of the last Duke of Milan. Upon this shadow of a title Francis founded his pretentions to the dutchy? which he supported with such talents and valour as placed him at last on the ducal throne. The virtues as well as abilities with which he governed, inducing his subjects to forget the defects in his title, he transmitted his dominions quietly to his son; from whom they descended to his grandson. He was murdered by his grand uncle Ludovico, furnamed the Moor, who took poffession of the dutchy; and his right to it was confirmed by the investiture of the Emperor Maximilian in the year one thousand four hundred and ninety-four °.

Ripalm, hist. Mediol, lib. vi. 654. ap. Struv. corp. i. 030. Du Mont Corps Diplom. tom. iii. p. ii. 333. ibid.

Lours XI. who took pleasure in depressing the Princes of SECT. III. the blood, and who admired the political abilities of Francis Sforza would not permit the Duke of Orleans to take any step in profecution of his right to the dutchy of Milan. Ludovico the Moor kept up fuch a close connection with Charles VIII. that during the greater part of his reign, the claim of the family of Orleans continued to lie dormant. But when the crown of France devolved to Louis XII. Duke of Orleans, he instantly afferted the rights of his family with the ardour which it was natural to expect. Ludovico Sforza, incapable of contending with fuch a rival, was stripped of all his dominions in the space of a few days. The King, clad in the ducal robes, entered Milan in triumph; and. foon after, Ludovico having been betrayed by the Swifs in his pay, was fent a prisoner into France, and thut up in the castle of Loches, where he lay unpitied during the remainder of his days. In confequence of one of the fingular revolutions which occur so frequently in the history of the Milanese, his son Maximilian Sforza was placed on the ducal throne, of which he kept possession during the reign of Louis XII. His successor A.D. 1812. Francis I. was too high-spirited and enterprizing tamely to relinguish his title. As soon as he was seated upon the throne, he prepared to invade the Milaucse; and his right of succession. to it, appears from this detail, to have been not only more natural but more just than that of any other competitor.

It is unnecessary to enter into any detail with respect to the form of government in Genoa, Parma, Modena, and the other inferior States of Italy. Their names, indeed, will often occur in the following history. But the power of these States.

SECT. III. States themselves was so inconsiderable, that their fate depended little upon their own efforts; and the frequent revolutions. which they underwent, were brought about by the or the orders. of the Princes who attacked or defended them, rather than by any thing peculiar in their internal constitution.

The conditution and government of Spain.

Or the great kingdoms on this fide of the Alps, Spain is one of the most considerable; and as it was the hereditary domain of Charles V, as well as the chief fource of his power and wealth. a diffinel knowledge of its political confliction is of capital importance towards understanding the transactions of his reign.

Conquered by the Vandale,

A. D. 712. and by the Moors.

THE Vandals and Goths, who overturned the Roman power in Spain, established a form of government in that country, and brought in customs and laws, perfectly similar to those which were introduced into the rest of Europe, by the other victorious tribes which acquired fettlements there. For fome time, fociety advanced, among the new inhabitants of Spain, by the same steps, and seemed to hold the same course, as in other European nations. To this progress, a sudden stop was put by the invalion of the Saracens or Moors. The Goths could not withfland the efforts of their enthuliaftick valour. which subdued Spain, with the same impetuous rapidity that diffinguithes all the operations of their arms. The conquerors introduced into the country in which they fettled the Mahometan religion, the Arabick language, the manners of the East, together with that tafle for the arts, and that love of elegance and splendour, which the Caliphs had begun to cultivate among their subjects.

Such Gothick nobles, as disdained to submit to the Moorish Sect. III. yoke, fled for refuge to the inaccessible mountains of Asturias, and comforted themselves with enjoying there the exercise of the Christian religion, and with maintaining the authority of their ancient laws. Being joined by many of the boldest and most warlike among their countrymen, they fallied out upon the adjacent settlements of the Moors, in small parties; and making flort excursions, were fatisfied with plunder and revenge, without thinking of conquest. By degrees, their strength increased, their views enlarged, a regular government was established among them, and they began to aim at extending their territories. While they pushed on their attacks with the unremitting ardour excited by zeal for religion, by the defire of vengcance, and by the hope of rescuing their country from oppression; while they conducted their operations with the courage natural to men who had no other occupation but war, and who were firangers to all the arts which corrupt or enfeeble the mind, the Moors gradually loft many of the advantages, to which they had been indebted for their first success. They threw off all dependance on the Caliphs *; they neglected to preferve a close connection with their countrymen in Africa; their Empire in Spain was split into many small kingdoms; together with the arts which they cultivated, the luxury to which these gave rife, relaxed, in some measure, the force of their military inflitutions, and abated the vigour of their warlike spirit. The Moors, however, continued still to be a gallant people, and poffeffed great refources. According to the magnificent flile of the Spanish historians, eight centuries of almost

* Jos. Sim. Assumannus Histor. Ital. Scriptores. Vol. iii. p. 135.

U, VOL. I. un-

The Chilliens graduilly recover dominton in Spain.

1492.

SECT. III. uninterrupted war elapsed, and three thousand seven hundred battles were fought before the last of the Moorath kingdoms in Spain submitted to the Christian arms.

The union of its various kingdoms.

As the Christians made their conquests upon the Mahometans at various periods, and under different leaders, each formed the territory which he had wrested from the common enemy, into an independant State. Spain was divided into as many separate kingdoms, as it contained provinces, and in each city of note, a petty Monarch established his throne, and assumed all the enfigns of royalty. In a feries of years, however, by the usual events of intermarriages, or legal succession, or conquest, all these inferior principalities were annexed to the more powerful kingdoms of Castile and of Aragon; and at length by the fortunate marriage of Ferdinand and Isabella, the former the hereditary Monarch of Aragon, and the latter raised to the throne of Castile by the affection of her subjects, all the Spanish crowns were united, and descended in the same line.

1481.

Their ant ent curloms and laws referred amiditall their revo ations;

FROM this period, the political constitution of Spain began to assume a regular and uniform appearance; the genius of government may be delineated, and the progress of its laws and manners may be traced with certainty. Notwithstanding the fingular revolution which had happened in Spain, and the peculiarity of its fate, in being fo long subjected to the Mahometan yoke, the customs introduced by the Vandals and Goths had taken such deep root, and were so thoroughly incorporated with the frame of its government, that in every province which the Christians recovered from the Moors, we find the condition of individuals, as well as the political conflitution, nearly the same as in other nations of Europe. Lands were held by the same tenure; justice was dispensed in the same form; the same privileges were claimed by the nobility; and the same power exercifed by the Cortes, or general affembly of the kingdom. Several circumstances contributed to secure this permanence of the feudal institutions in Spain, notwithstanding the conquest of the Moors, which seemed to have overturned them. Such of the Spaniards," as preserved their independance, adhered to their ancient customs not only from attachment to them, but out of antipathy to the Moors, to whose ideas concerning property and government these customs were so totally repugnant. Even among the Christians, who submitted to the Moorish conquerors, and consented to become their subjects, ancient customs were not entirely abolished. They were permitted to retain their religion; their laws concerning private property; their forms of administring justice; and their mode of levying taxes. The followers of Mahomet are the only enthusiasts, who have united the spirit of toleration with zeal for making profelytes, and who, at the same time that they took arms to propagate the doctrine of their prophet, permited fuch as would not embrace it, to adhere to their own tenets and to practife their own rites. To this peculiarity in the genius of the Mahometan religion, as well as to the defire of the Moors to reconcile the Christians to their yoke, it was owing that the ancient manners and laws in Spain survived the violent shock of a conquest, and continued to subsist, notwithstanding the introduction of a new religion and a new form of government into that country. It is obvious from all these particulars, that the Christians must have found it extremely eafy to re-establish manners and government on their ancient foundations, in those provinces of Spain, which they wrested fuccessively IJ 2 which renders their state in fome degree fimilar to that of other nations of Europe.

STATE OF EUROPE.

SECT. III. fuccessively from the Moors. A confiderable part of the people retained such a fondness for the customs, and such a reverence for the laws of their ancestors, that they wished to see them restored with full authority, and were not only willing but eager to observe the former, and to recognize the authority of the latter.

Cert in peculiarities in their conflitution and laws.

The prerogative more limited, and the immunities of the propte more extensive.

BUT though the feudal form of government, with all the institutions that characterize it, was thus preserved entire in Castile and Aragon, as well as in all the kingdoms which depended on these crowns, there were certain peculiarities in their political constitutions which distinguish them from those of any other country in Europe. The regal prerogative, extremely limited in every feudal kingdom, was circumferibed, in Spain, within fuch narrow bounds, as reduced the power of the fovereign almost to nothing. The privileges of the nobility were vast in proportion, and extended fo far, as to border on absolute independance. The immunities of the cities were great, they possessed considerable influence in the Cortes or supreme assemblies of the nations, and they afpired at obtaining more. Such a flate of fociety, in which the political machine was fo ill adjusted, and the several members of the legislature to improperly balanced, produced interior diforders in the kingdoms of Spain, which rose beyond the pitch of turbulence and anarchy, usual under the seudal government. The whole tenor of the Spanish history confirms the truth of this observation; and when the mutinous spirit, to which the genius of their policy gave birth and vigour, was not restrained and overawed by the immediate dread of the Moorish arms, it broke out into more frequent frequent infurrections against the government of their Princes, Sect. III as well as more outrageous infults on their dignity, than occur in the annals of any other country. These were accompanied at some times with more liberal sentiments concerning the rights of the people, at other times with more elevated notions concerning the privileges of the nobles, than were common in other nations.

STATE OF EUROPE.

In the principality of Catalonia, which was annexed to the Inflances of kingdom of Aragon, the impatience of the people to obtain the redrefs of their grievances having prompted them to take arms against their sovereign John II, they, by a solemn deed, recalled. A. D. 1462. the oath of allegiance which they had fworn to him, declared him and his posterity to be unworthy of the throne P, and endeavoured to establish a republican form of government, in order to secure the perpetual enjoyment of that liberty, after which they aspired . Nearly about the same period, the indignation of the Castilian nobility against the weak and flagitious adminifiration of Henry IV, having led them to combine against him, they arrogated as one of the privileges belonging to their order, the right of trying and of passing sentence on their sovereign. That the exercise of this power might be as publick and solemn, as the pretention to it was bold, they fummoned all the nobi- A. D. 1465. lity of their party to meet at Avila, a spacious theatre was erected in a plain without the walls of the town, an image re-

P Zurita Anales de Arag. tom. iv. 113, 115, &c.

⁴ Ferreras hist. d' Espagne, tom. vii. p. 92. P. Orleans revol. d' Espagne, tom. iii. p. 155. L. Marinæus Siculus de reb. Hispan, apud Schotti script. Hispan. vol. 429.

SECT. III. presenting the King, was seated on a throne, clad in royal robes, with a crown on its head, a sceptre in its hand, and the fword of justice by its side. The accusation against the King was read, and the fentence of deposition was pronounced, in presence of a numerous assembly. At the close of the first article of the charge, the archbishop of Toledo advanced, and tore the crown from the head of the image; * the close of the second, the Conde de Placentia snatched the sword of justice from its side; at the close of the third, the Conde de Benevente wrested the sceptre from its hand; at the close of the late, Don Diego Lopes de Stuniga tumbled it headlong from the throne. At the same instant, Don Alfonso, Henry's brother, was proclaimed King of Castile and Leon in his stead'.

> THE most daring leaders of faction would not have ventured on these measures, nor have conducted them with such publick ceremony, if the fentiments of the people concerning the royal dignity, had not been fo formed by the laws and policy, to which they were accustomed both in Castile and Aragon, as prepared them to approve of such extraordinary proceedings, or to acquiesce in them.

The constitution and government of Aragon.

In Aragon, the form of government was monarchical, but the genius and maxims of it were purely republican. The Kings, who were long elective, retained only the shadow of power; the real exercise of it was in the Cortes or parliament of the kingdom. This supreme assembly was composed of four different arms or members. The nobility of the first rank. Sect. II The Equestrian order, or nobility of the second class. The representatives of the cities and towns, whose right to a place in the Cortes, if we may give credit to the historians of Aragon, was coeval with the conflitution. The ecclefiaftical order, composed of the dignitaries of the church, together with the representatives of the inferior clergy. No law could pass in this assembly without the affent of every fingle member who had a right to vote'. Without the permission of the Cortes, no tax could be imposed; no war could be declared; no peace concluded; no money could be coined; nor any alteration be made in the current specie". The power of reviewing the proceedings of all inferior courts, the privilege of inspecting every department of administration, and the right of redressing all grievances belonged Nor did those who conceived themselves to be to the Cortes. aggrieved address the Cortes in the humble tone of supplicants, and petition for redrefs; they demanded it as the birth-right of free men, and required the guardians of their liberty to decide with respect to the points which they laid before them *. This fovereign court was held, during feveral centuries, every year; but, in confequence of a regulation introduced about the beginning of the fourteenth century, it was convened from that period only once in two years. After it was affembled, the King had no right to prorogue or dissolve it without its own consent; and the fession continued forty days '.

* Marian, hift, lib, xxiii. c. 9.

STATE OF EUROPE.

• Forma de celebrar Cortes en Aragon, por Geron. Martel.

^{&#}x27; Martel. ibid p. 2.

Hier. Blanca comment. rer. Aragon, ap. Schot. script. Hispan. vol. iil. p. 750.

^{*} Martel Forma de celebr. p. 2.

y Hier. Blanca comment. 763.

Office and jurification of the Justiza.

Not fatisfied with having erected these barriers against the encroachments of the royal prerogetive, nor willing to rely for the prefervation of their liberties on the vigilance and authority of an affembly, limitar to the diets, flates general, and parliaments, in which the other feudal nations placed to much confidence, the Aragonese had recourse to an institution peculiar to themselves, and elected a Justiza or sugreme judge. This magistrate, whose office bore some resemblance to that of the Ephori in ancient Sparta, acted as the guardian of the people, and the comptroller of the Prince. The person of the Justiza was facred, and his power and jurisdiction almost unbounded. He was the supreme interpreter of the laws. Not only inferior judges, but the Kings themselves were bound to consult him in every doubtful case, and to receive his responses with implicit deference*. An appeal lay to him from the royal judges, as well as from those appointed by the barons within their respective territories. Even when no appeal was made to him, he could interpose by his own authority, prohibit the ordinary judge to proceed, take immediate cognizance of the cause himself, and remove the party accused to the Manifestation or prison of the flate, to which no person had access but by his permission. His power was exerted with no less vigour and effect in superintending the administration of government, than in regulating the course of justice. It was the prerogative of the Justiza to inspect the conduct of the King. He had a title to review all the royal proclamations and patents, and to declare whether or not they were agreeable to law, and ought ^{*} Blanca has preferred two responses of the Justiza to James II, who reigned towards the close of the thirteenth century, Blanca 748.

DEDICATION.

It is our happiness to feel the influence of these Virtues; and to live under the dominion of a Prince, who delights more in promoting the Publick Welfare, than in receiving the just Praise of his royal beneficence. I am,

SIR,

. YOUR MAJESTY'S

Most faithful Subject.

And most dutiful Servant,

WILLIAM ROBERTSON.

SECT. III. for it approached to superstitious veneration [HIII]. In the preamble to one of their laws, they declare that such was the barrent ness of their country, and the poverty of the inhabitants, that if it were not on account of the liberties by which they were distinguished from other nations, the people would shadon it, and go in quest of a settlement to some more statistic region.

Conflication and government of Caftile.

In Castile, there were not such peculiarities in the form of government, as to establish any remarkable distinction between it, and that of the other European nations. The executive part of government was committed to the King, but with a prerogative extremely limited. The legislative authority refided in the Cortes, which was composed of the nobility, the dignified ecclefiafticks, and the representatives of the cities. The affembly of the Cortes in Castile was very ancient, and feems to have been coeval with the constitution. The members of the three different orders, who had a right of fuffrage, met in one place, and deliberated as one collective body; the decifions of which were regulated by the sentiments of the majority. The right of impoling taxes, of enacting laws, and of redresling grievances belonged to this affembly; and in order to secure the affent of the King to fuch flatutes and regulations, as were deemed falutary or beneficial to the kingdom, it was usual in the Cortes, to take no step towards granting money, until all business relative to the publick welfare was concluded. The representatives of cities seem to have obtained a feat very early in the Cortes of Caftile, and foon acquired fuch

[HH] NOTE XXXI.

Hier. Blanca Com. p. 751.

influence

STATE OF EUROPE

influence and credit, as were very uncommon, at a period Sect. In when the folendair and pre-eminence of the nobility had eclipfed or appibilized all other orders of men. The number of manifers from cities bore fuch a proportion to that of the whole collective body, as rendered them extremely respectable in the Corres III, The degree of confideration, which they possessed in the state, may be estimated by one event. Upon the death of John I, a council of regency was appointed to govern the king- A. D. dom during the minority of his fon. It was composed of an equal number of noblemen, and of deputies chosen by the cities; the latter were admitted to the same rank, and invested with the same powers, as prelates and grandees of the first order. But though the members of communities in Castile were elevated above the condition wherein they were placed in other kingdoms of Europe; though they had attained to fuch political importance, that even the proud and jealous spirit of the feudal ariflocracy could not exclude them from some share of government; yet the nobles, notwithstanding these acquisitions of the commons, continued to affert the privileges of their order, in opposition to the crown, in a tone extremely high. There was not any body of nobility in Europe more diffinguished for independance of spirit, haughtiness of deportment, and bold pretentions, than that of Castile. The history of that monarchy affords the most striking examples of the vigilance with which they observed, and of the vigour with which they opposed every scheme of their Kings, that tended to encroach on their jurisdiction, to diminish their dignity, or to abridge their power. Even in their ordinary intercourse with their

[II] NOTE XXXII.

Marian, hift. lib. 18. c. 15.

SECT. III. Monarchs, they preferved such a consciousness of their rank, that the nobles of the first order claimed it as a privilege to be. covered in the royal presence, and approached their sovereigns rather as equals than as subjects.

> THE constitution of the subordinate monarchies, which depended on the crowns of Castile and Aragon, nearly resembled that of the kingdom to which they were annexed. In all of them, the dignity and independance of the nobles were great; the immunities and power of the cities were confiderable.

Various caufes of the limited authority of the Spanish Monarchs.

An attentive observation of the fingular fituation of Spain, as well as of the various events which occurred there, from the invasion of the Moors to the union of its kingdoms under Ferdinand and Isabella, will discover those causes, to which all the peculiarities in its political conflitution, that I have pointed out, ought to be ascribed.

As the provinces of Spain were wrested from the Mahometans gradually and with difficulty, the nobles, who followed the standard of any eminent leader in these wars, conquered not for him alone, but for themselves. They claimed a thare in the lands which their valour had torn from the enemy, and their prosperity and power increased, in proportion as the territory of the Prince extended.

DURING their perpetual wars with the Moors, the Monarchs of Spain depended so much on their nobles, that it became neceffary to conciliate their good will by fucceffive grants of new honours honours and privileges. By the time that any Prince could SECT. III. establish his dominion in a conquered province, the greater part of the property was parcelled out by him among his barons, with fuch jurisdiction and immunities as raised them almost to fovereign power.

STATE OF EUROPE.

AT the same time, the kingdoms erected in so many different corners of Spain were extremely inconsiderable. petty Monarch was but little elevated above his nobles. They, feeling themselves to be almost his equals, acted as such. The Kings of fuch limited domains could neither command much respect, nor possess great power; and noblemen, so nearly on the fame level, could not look up to them with that reverence, with which the fovereigns of the great monarchies in Europe were viewed by their subjects [KK].

THESE circumflances concurred in exalting the nobility, and in depressing the royal authority; there were others, which raised the cities in Spain to confideration and power.

As the open country, during the wars with the Moors, was perpetually exposed to the excursions of the enemy, with whom no peace or truce was fo permanent as to prove any lasting fecurity, felf-preservation obliged persons of all ranks to fix their residence in places of strength. The castles of the barons, which, in other countries, afforded a commodious retreat from the depredations of banditti, or from the transient violence of any interior commution, were unable to [KK] NOTE XXXIII.

SECT III. refift an enemy whose operations were conducted with regular and persevering vigour. Cities, in which great numbers united. for their mutual defence, were the only places to which people could retire with any prospect of safety. To this was owing the rapid growth of those cities in Spain of which the Chriflians recovered pollesion. All who fledefrom the Moorish yoke reforted to them, as to an afrium; and there, the greater part of those, who took the field against the Mahometans, established their families.

> EACH of these cities, during a longer or shorter course of years, was the capital of a little state, and enjoyed all the advantages, which accelerate the increase of inhabitants in every place that is the feat of government.

THE number of cities in Spain, at the beginning of the fifteenth century, was confiderable, and they were peopled far beyond the proportion which was common in other parts of Europe, except in Italy and the Low-Countries. The Moors had introduced manufactures into these cities, while under their dominion. The Christians, who, by intermixture with them, had learned their arts, continued to cultivate there. The trade of several of the Spanish towns appears to have been confiderable; and the spirit of commerce continued to preserve the number of their inhabitants, as the sense of danger had first induced them to crowd together.

As the Spanish cities were populous, many of the inhabitants were of a rank superior to those who resided in towns in other other countries of Europe. That cause which contributed SECT. He chiefly to their population, affected equally persons of every condition, who slocked thither promiseuously, in order to find shelter, or in hopes of making a stand there against the enemy, with greater advantage than in any other station. The persons elected as their representatives in the Cortes by the cities, or promoted to offices of trust and dignity in the government of the community, were often, as will appear from transactions which I shall hereafter relate, of such considerable rank in the kingdom, as restected suffre on their constituents, and on the stations wherein they were placed.

STATE OF EUROPE

As it was impossible to carry on a continual war against the Moors, without some other military force, than that which the barons were obliged to bring into the sied, in consequence of the feudal tenures, it became necessary to have some troops, particularly a body of light cavalry, in constant pay. It was one of the privileges of the nobles, that their lands were exempt from the burden of taxes. The charge of supporting the troops requisite for the publick safety, fell wholly upon the cities; and their Kings, being obliged frequently to apply to them for aid, found it necessary to gain their favour by concessions, which extended their immunities, and added to their wealth and power.

WHEN the influence of all these circumstances, peculiar to Spain, is added to the general and common causes, which contributed to aggrandize cities in other countries of Europe, this will sully

SECT.III, fully account for the extensive privileges which they acquired, as well as the extraordinary confideration to which they attained, in all the Spanish kingdoms [LL].

Measures of different Princes in order to extend their power, particularly of Ferdinand and Habella.

By these exorbitant privileges of the nobility, and this unusual power of the cities in Spain, the royal prerogative was hemmed in on every hand, and reduced within very narrow bounds. Senfible of this, and impatient of fuch restraint, different Monarchs endeavoured, at various junctures, to enlarge their own jurisdiction, and to circumscribe that of their subjects. Their power, however, or their abilities were fo unequal to the undertaking, that their efforts were attended with little fuccess. But when Ferdinand and Isabella found themselves at the head of all the united kingdoms of Spain, and delivered from the danger and interruption of domestick wars, they were not only in a condition to refume, but were able to profecute with advantage, the schemes of extending the prerogative, which their ancestors had attempted in vain. Ferdinand's profound fagacity in concerting his measures, his persevering industry in conducting them, and his uncommon address in carrying them into execution, fitted him admirably for an undertaking which required all thefe talents.

Ferdinand's different . Schemes for abildging the privile, es and power of the nob.livy.

As the overgrown power, and high pretentions of the nobility were what the Monarchs of Spain felt most fensibly, and bore with the greatest impatience, the great object of Ferdinand's policy was to reduce these within more moderate bounds. Under various pretexts, fometimes by violence, more frequently in confequence of decrees obtained in the courts of law,

[LL] NOTE XXXIV.

he wrested from the barons a great part of the lands, which SECT. III. had been granted to them by the inconfiderate bounty of former Monarche, particularly during the feeble and profuse reign of his predecessor Henry IV. He did not give the entire conduct of affairs to perions of noble birth, who were accustomed to occupy every department of importance in peace or in war, as if it had been a privilege peculiar to their order, to be employed as the fole counsellors and ministers of the crown. He often transacted business of great consequence without their intervention, and committed many offices of power and trust to new men, devoted to his interest . He introduced a degree of Rate dignity into his court, which being unknown in Spain, while it remained split into many small kingdoms, taught the nobles to approach their fovereign with more ceremony, and gradually rendered him the object of greater deference and respect.

THE annexing the masterships of the three military orders of St. Jago, Calatrava, and Alcantara, to the crown, was another expedient, by which Ferdinand greatly augmented the revenue and power of the Kings of Spain. These orders were instituted in imitation of those of the Knights Templars and of St. John of Jerusalem, on purpose to wage perpetual war with the Mahometans, and to protect the pilgrims who vifited Compostella, or other places of eminent fanctity in Spain. zeal and superstition of the ages, in which they were founded, prompted perions of every rank to believe limb liberal some tions on these body warriors, that, in a lacor time, they engroffed a confiderable there in the property and would or the kingdom. The materthips of their patters came to be illumine of the greatest power and opulance to wants a Spenilla mobile man could be advanced. These high dignities were in the difpolal of the Knights of the Order, and placed the periods on whom they conferred them almost on a level with their sovereign [MM]. Ferdinand, unwilling that the nobility, whom he confidered as already too formidable, should derive such additional credit and influence from pollelling the government of these wealthy fraternities, was folicitous to wrest it out of their hands, and to vest it in the crown. His measures for accomplishing this, were wifely planned, and executed with vigour. By address, by promises, and by threats, he prevailed on the Knights of each Order to place Isabella and him at the head of Innocent VIII. and Alexander VI. gave this election the the fanction of papal authority ; and fubfequent Pontiffs rendered the annexation of these masterships to the crown perpetual.

Particularly by annexing the grandmallerships of the three orders to the crewn;

· Zurita anales de Arag. tom. vi. p. 22.

Secr.III.

A. D. 1476, and 1493.

WHILE Ferdinand, by this measure, diminished the power and influence of the nobility, and added new lustre or authority to the crown, he was taking other important steps with a view to the same object. The sovereign jurisdiction which the feudal barons exercised within their own territories, was the pride and distinction of their order. To have invaded

And hy circumferibing the jurifiction of the nobility.

[MM] NOTE XXXV.

- · Marian, hift. lib. xxv. c. 5.
- Zurita anales tom. v. p. 22. Elif Anton, Nobriffenia rerum a Ferdinand & Elizabe gestarum decades: ii. apud Schot. script: Hispan. i. 860.

STATE OF EUROPE.

uponly a privilege which they prized to highly, and in defence often of which they would have run to enger! y to arms, was a mighture 100 design for a Prince of Fordinand's cautious temper. however, of an opportunity which the flate of his languages and the foliat of his people presented him, in order to waterning what he durk not affault. The incellant depredutions of the Moors, the want of discipline among the troops which were employed to oppose them, the frequent civil wars between the crown and the nobility, as well as the undifcerning rage with which the barons carried on their private wars with each other, filled all the provinces of Spain with disorder. outrage, and murder, became fo common, as not only to interrupt commerce, but in a great measure to suspend all intercourse between one place and another. That fecurity and protection which men expect from entering into civil fociety, ccased almost totally. Interior order and police, while the feudal institutions remained in vigour, were so little objects of attention, and the administration of justice was so extremely feeble, that it would have been vain to have expedied relief from the established laws or the ordinary judges. But the evil became so intolcrable, and the inhabitants of cities, who were the chief full erers, grew fo impatient of this anarchy, that felf-preservation forced them to have recourse to an extraordinary remedy. About the middle of the thirtrenth century, the cities in the kingdom of Aragon, and after their example those in Castile, formed themselves into an affociation, diffinguished by the name of the Holy Brotherbood. They exacted a certain contribution from each of the affociated towns; they levied a confiderable body of troops, in order to protect travellers, and to pursue criminals; they appointed judges, who opened their courts in various parts of the kingdom.

Spor III

SECT.III. dom. Whoever was guilty of murder, robbery, or of my adthat violated the publick peace, and was soized by the troops of the Brotherbood, was carried before their own judges, whe without paying any regard to the exclusive and fovereign His diction which the lord of the place might claim, stied and co demned the criminals. By means of this, the prompt and imported administration of justice was reflored; and together with it, internal tranquillity and order began to return. The nobles alone murmured at this falutary institution. They complained of it as an encroachment on one of their most valuable privileges.. They remonstrated against it in an high tone; and, on some occasions, refused to grant any aid to the crown, unless it were abolished. Ferdinand, however, was sensible not only of the good effects of the Holy Brotherhood with respect to the police of his kingdoms, but perceived its tendency to abridge, and at length to annihilate the territorial jurisdiction of the nobility. He countenanced the inflitution on every occasion. He supported it with the whole force of royal authority; and befides the expedients employed by him in common with the other monarchs of Europe, he availed himself of this institution, which was peculiar to his kingdom, in order to limit and abolish that independant jurisdiction of the nobility, which was no less inconsistent with the authority of the Prince, than with the order of faciety [NN].

Notwithflanding all thefe, the government of apain flul extremely vec. But though Ferdinand by these measures considerably en larged the boundaries of prerogative, and acquired a degree of influence and power far beyond what any of his predectifier had enjoyed, yet the limitations of the royal authority, and the barriers against its encroachments, continued to be many and strong. The spirit of liberty was vigorous among the people of Spain;

[NN] NOTE XXXVI

the

STATE OF EUROPE.

the spirit of independance was high among the nobility; and SECT. III though the love of glory, peculiar to the Spaniards in every period of their bistory, prompted them to support Ferdinand with zeal in his foreign operations, and to afford him such aid as enabled him not only to undertake but to execute great enterprizes; he referred over his subjects with a jurisdiction less extensive than that of any of the great monarchs in Europe. It will appear from many passages in the following history, that, during a considerable part of the reign of his successor Charles V. the prerogative of the Spanish crown was equally circumscribed.

and govern-

THE ancient government and laws in France to nearly refeme Conditions. bled those of the other feudal kingdoms, that such a detail with ment of respect to them as was necessary, in order to convey some idea of strance. the nature and effects of the peculiar institutions which took place in Spain, would be superfluous. In the view which I have exhibited of the means by which the French monarchs acquired fuch full command of the national force of their kingdom, as enabled them to engage in extensive schemes of foreign operation, I have already pointed out the great steps by which they advanced towards a more ample possession of political power, and a more uncontrouled exercise of their royal prerogative. All that now remains is to take notice of such particulars in the constitution of France, as serve either to distinguish it from that of other countries, or tend to throw any light on the transactions of that period to which the following history extends.

Under the French monarche of the first race, the royal pre- lower of the rogative was very inconfiderable. The General Assemblies of the femblies and nation, which mer annually at stated seasons, extended their au- race of Kings. thority to every department of government. The power of electing

General As

Under the fecond.

SECT.III. electing Kings, of enacting laws, of redreffing grievances, of passing judgment in the last refort, with respect to every person and to every cause, and of conferring donations on the Prince, refided in this great convention of the nation. Under the fecond race of Kings, notwithstanding the power and splendour which the conquests of Charlemagne added to the crown, the general affemblies of the nations continued to pollets extensive authority. The right of determining which of the royal family should be placed on the throne was vested in them. The monarchs elected by their suffrage were accustomed regularly to call and to confult them with respect to every affair of importance to the flate, and without their confent no law was passed, and no new tax was levied.

I nder the thud.

Bt T, by the time that Hugh Capet, the father of the third race of Kings, took possession of the throne of France, such changes had happened in the political flate of the kingdom, as confiderably affected the power and jurisdiction of the general affirmbly of the nation. The royal authority in the hands of the degenerate posterity of Charlemagne, had dwindled into intignificance and contempt. Every confiderable proprietor of land had formed his territory into a barony, almost independent of the fovereign. The dukes or governors of provinces, the counts or governors of towns and finall diffricts, and the great officers of the crown, had rendered thefe dignities, originally granted only during pleafure or for life, hereditary in their families. Each of these had usurped all the rights which hitherto had been deemed the distinctions of royalty, particularly the privileges of dispensing justice within their own domains, of coining money, and of waging war. Every diffrict was governed by local cuftoms, acknowledged a diffinct lord, and purfued a feparate interest. The formality of doing homage to their sove- SECT.III. reign, was almost the only act of subjection which haughty barons would perform, and that bound them no farther than they were willing to acknowledge its obligation [OO].

STATE OF EUROPE.

In a kingdom broken into so many independent baronies, The power hardly any common principle of union remained; and the general affembly in its deliberations could fearce confider the nation as forming one body, or establish common regulations to be of tensive. equal force in every part. Within the immediate domains of the crown the King might publish laws, and they were obeyed, because there he was acknowledged as the only lord. But if he had aimed at rendering these general, that would have alarmed the barons as an encroachment upon the independance of their jurifdiction. The barons, with no less care, avoided the enacting of general laws, because the execution of them must have been vested in the King, and would have enlarged that paramount power which was the object of their jealousy. Thus, under the descendants of Hugh Capet, the States General (for that was the name by which the supreme assembly of the French nation came then to be diflinguished) lost their legislative authority, or at least entirely relinquished the exercise of it. From that period, the jurisdiction of the States General extended no farther than to the impolition of new taxes, the determination of que-Rions with respect to the right of succession to the crown, the fertling of the regency when the preceding monarch had not fixed it by his will, and the prefenting remonstrances chumerating the grievances of which the nation wished to obtain redrefs.

of the General Affembly less considerable and ex-

A VIEW OF THE

SECT.IH.

As, during several centuries, the monarche of Europe islams demanded extraordinary subsidies of their subsects, and the other events which required the interposition of the States, rands of curred, their meetings in France were not frequent. They were summoned occasionally by their Kings, when compelled by their wants or by their fears to have recourse to their aid; but they did not, like the Diet in Germany, the Cortes in Spain; or the Parliament in England, form an effential member of the constitution, the regular exertion of whose powers was requisite to give vigour and order to government.

The erown begins to acquite legislative authority,

When the States of France ceased to exercise legislative authority, the Kings began to assume it. They ventured at first on acts of legislation with great reserve; and after taking every precaution that could prevent their subjects from being alarmed at the exercise of a new power. They did not at once issue their ordinances in a tone of authority and command. They treated with their subjects; they pointed out what was best; and allured them to comply with it. By degrees, however, as the prerogative of the crown extended, and as the supreme jurisdiction of the royal courts came to be established, the Kings of France assumed more openly the stile and authority of law-givers, and before the beginning of the sisteenth century, the complete legislative power was vested in them [PP].

and the power of levying taxes. HAVING secured this important acquisition, the steps shat led to the right of impoling taxes were rendered few and early. The people, accustomed to see their sovereigns, by their sole authority, issue ordinances which regulated points of the greatest confequence with respect to the property of their subjects, were not alarmed when they were required, by the royal edicts, to contri- Sect bute certain fums towards supplying the exigencies of government, and carrying forward the measures of the nation. When Charles VII. and Louis XI. first ventured to exercise this new power, in the manner which I have already described, the gradual increase of the royal authority had so imperceptibly prepared the minds of the people of France for this innovation, that it excited no commotion in the kingdom, and feems scarce to have given rife to any murmur or complaint.

[PP] NOTE XXXVIII.

STATE OF EUROPE.

of France becomes purely monarchical.

WHEN the Kings of France had thus engroffed every power Government which can be exerted in government; when the right of making laws, of levying money, of keeping an army of mercenaries in constant pay, of declaring war and of concluding peace centered in the crown, the constitution of the kingdom, which, under the first race of Kings, was nearly democratical, which, under the fecond race, became an ariflocracy, terminated, under the third race, in a pure monarchy. Every thing that tended to preferve the appearance, or revive the memory of the ancient mixed government, feems from that period to have been industriously avoided. During the long and active reign of Francis I. the variety as well as extent of whose operations obliged him to lay many heavy impositions on his subjects, the States General of France were not once affembled, nor were the people once allowed to exert the power of taxing themselves, which, according to the original ideas of feudal government, was a right effential to every free-nan.

Two things, however, remained, which moderated the exercife of the regal prerogative, and restrained it within such bounds restrained by VOL. I. Z_{4}

The exercise of merogative the privileges of the nubiluy.

A VIEW OF THE

SECT. III.

as preserved the constitution of France from degenerating into mere despotism. The rights and privileges claimed by the nobility must be considered as one barrier against the absolute dominion of the crown. Though the nobles of France had loft that political power which was vefted in their order as a body, they fill retained the perional rights and pre-eminence which they derived from their rank. They preserved a consciousingly of clevation above other classes of citizens; an exemption from burdens to which they were subject; a contempt of the occupations in which they were engaged; the privilege of affuming enfigns that indicated their dignity; a title to be treated with a certain degree of deference during peace; and a claim to various distinctions when in the field. Many of these pretensions were not founded on the words of flatutes, or derived from politive laws; they were defined and afcertained by the maxims of honour, a title more delicate, but no less facred. These rights, established and protected by a principle equally vigilant in guarding, and intrepid in defending them, are to the Sovereign himself objects of respect and veneration. Wherever they stand in its way, the royal prerogative is bounded. The violence of a Despot may exterminate fuch an order of men; but as long as it sublists, and its ideas of personal distinction remain entire, the power of the Prince has limits 1.

As in France, the body of nobility was very numerous, and retained an high fense of their own pre-eminence, to this we may ascribe, in a great measure, the mode of exercising the royal prerogative which peculiarly distinguishes the government of that kingdom. An intermediate order was placed between the Monarch and his other subjects, and in every act of authority it became necessary to attend to its privileges, and not only SECT. III. to guard against any real violation of these, but to avoid any suspicion of its being possible that they might be violated. Thus a species of government was established in France, unknown in the ancient world, that of a monarchy, in which the power of the fovereign, though unconfined by any legal or constitutional restraint, has certain bounds set to it by the ideas which one class of his subjects entertain concerning their own dignity.

^{*} Des Esprits des Loix, liv. ii. c. 4. Dr. Ferguson's Essay on the Hist. of Civil Society, part. i. sec. 10.

THE jurisdiction of the Parliaments of France, particularly And by the that of Paris, was the other barrier which served to confine the exercise of the royal prerogative within certain limits. The parliament of Paris was originally the court of the Kings of of Paris. France, to which they committed the supreme administration of justice within their own domains, as well as the power of deciding with respect to all cases brought before it by appeals from the courts of the barons. When the time and place of its meeting were fixed, when not only the form of its procedure, but the principles on which it decided, were rendered regular and confishent, when every cause of importance was finally determined there, and when the people became accustomed to refort thither as to the supreme temple of justice, the parliament of Paris rose to high estimation in the kingdom, its members acquired dignity, and its decrees were submitted to, with deference. The Kings of France, when they first began to assume the legislative power, in order to reconcile the minds of their people to this new exertion of prerogative, produced their edicts and ordinances in the parliament of Paris, that they might be approved of and registered there, before they were published and declared to be of authority in the kingdom. During the jurifdiction of the parliaments, particularly that

SECT.III. intervals between the meetings of the States General of the kingdom, or under those reigns when the States General were not affembled, the Monarchs of France were accustomed to confult the parliament of Paris with respect to the most arduous affairs of government, and frequently regulated their conduct by its advice, in declaring war, in concluding peace, and in other transactions of publick concern. Thus there was erected in the kingdom a tribunal which became the great depository of the laws, and by the uniform tenor of its decrees it established principles of justice and forms of proceeding which were considered as so sacred, that even the sovereign power of the Monarch durst not venture to difregard or to violate them. The members of this illustrious body, though they neither possess legislative authority, nor can be confidered as the representatives of the people, have availed themselves of the reputation and influence which they had acquired among their countrymen, in color to make a fland to the utmost of their ability against every arprecedented and exorbitant exertion of the prerogative. every period of the French history, they have merited the proffs of being the virtuous but feeble guardians of the rights and privileges of the nation [QQ].

Confliction and government of the German Empirc.

THE kingdom extends to the confines of the German Empire, from which Charles V. derived his title of highest dignity. In explaining the political conftitution of this vaft and complex body at the beginning of the fixteenth century, I shall avoid entering into fuch a detail as would involve my readers in that inextricable labyrinth, which it formed by the multiplicity of its tribunals, the number of its members, their interfering rights, and by the endless discussions or refine- SECT. III. ments of the publick lawyers of Germany with respect to all

STATE OF EUROPE.

THE Empire of Charlemagne was a structure erected in so short a time that it could not be permanent. Under his immediate successor it began to totter; and it soon fell to pieces. The crown of Germany was separated for ever from that of France, and the descendants of Charlemagne established two prest monarchies fo fituated as to give rife to a perpetual rivalthip and enmity between them. But the Princes of the race of Charlemagne who were placed on the Imperial throne, were or altogether to degenerate, as those of the same family who ligned in France. In the hands of the former the royal authothy retained fome vigour, and the nobles of Germany, though · 0. fled of extensive privileges as well as ample territories, did carrly attain independance. It he great offices of the crowncontinued to be at the diffiold of the fovereign, and during a ling period, fiefs remained in their original state, without becoming herditary and perpetual in the families to which they had been granted.

scendante.

AT length the German branch of the family of Charlemagne became extinct, and his feeble descendants who reigned in France had funk into fuch contempt, that the Germans, without rial diguity. looking towards them, exercised the right inherent in a free people; and in a general affembly of the nation elected Conrad A. P. o. t. Count of Franconia Emperor. After him Henry, of Saxony, and his descendants the three Othos, were placed, in succession,

Cuber fami ltes are tailed to the Imper

A VIEW OF THE

A. D. 952.

SECT. III. on the Imperial throne, by the fuffrages of their countrymen The extensive territories of the Saxon Emperors, their eminent abilities and enterprizing genius not only added new victoria the Imperial dignity, but raised it to higher power and present nence. Otho the Great marched at the head of a numerous army into Italy, and after the example of Charlemagne, gave law to that country. Every power there recognized his anthority. He created Popes and deposed them by his sovereign mandate. He annexed the kingdom of Italy to the German Empire. Elated with his fuccefs, he affumed the title of Sæsar Augustus"; and a Prince born in the heart of Germany pretended to be the successor of the Emperors of ancient Rome, and claimed a right to the fame power and prerogative.

The German nobility acquire independant and fovereign autherity.

Bur while the Emperors, by means of these new titles, and new dominions, gradually acquired additional power and fplendour, the nobility of Germany went on at the same time extending their privileges and jurisdiction. The situation of affairs was favourable to their attempts. The vigour which Charlemagne had given to government quickly relaxed. The inability of fome of his fucceffors was fuch, as would have encouraged vaffals less enterprizing than the nobles of that age, to have claimed new rights and to have affumed new powers. The civil wars in which other Emperors were engaged, obliged them to me pay perpetual court to their subjects on whose support they depended, and not only to connive at their usurpations, but to permit and even to authorize them. Fiers became gradually he reditary. They were transmitted not only in the direct but in the collateral line. The investiture of them was demanded not only by male but by female heirs. Every baron began to ex- SECT. III. ercife fovereign jurisdiction within his own domains; and the Dukes and Counts of Germany took wide steps towards rendesign their territories distinct and independent States. server hangerors observed their progress, and were aware of its railed to the to accupe. But as they could not hope to humble valials alreserve grown too potent, unless they had turned their whole force as well as attention to that enterprize, and as they were extremely intent on their expeditions into Italy, which they could not undertake without the concurrence of their nobles, they were follicitous not to alarm them by any direct attack on their privileges and juridictions. They aimed, however, at undermining their power, and inconfiderately bestowed additional territories, and accumulated new honours on the clergy, in hopes that this order might serve as a counterpoise to that of the nobility in any future flruggle k,

Annalista Saxo, Ac. ap. Struv. Corp. vol. i. p. 246.

STATE OF EUROPE

The German ecclefialticks fame power.

THE unhappy effects of this fatal error in policy were. The fatal efquickly felt. Under the Emperors of the Franconian and Swa- grandizing bian lines, whom the Germans by their voluntary election placed A. D. 1024. on the Imperial throne, a new face of things appeared, and a scene was exhibited in Germany, which astonished all Christendom at that time, and which in the present age appears almost incredible. The Popes, hitherto dependant on the Emperors, and. indebted for their power as well as dignity to their beneficence and protection, began to claim a superior jurisdiction; and in virtue of authority which they pretended to derive from heaven, tried, condemned, excomunicated and deputed their former Nor is this to be confidered merely as a francisk fally of passion in a pontist intoxicated with high ideas concension the extent of priefly domination, and the plenitude of the power. Gregory VII. was able as well as daring. lumption and violence were accompanied with political cernment and fagacity. He had observed that the Princes and nobles of Germany, had acquired such considerable territories and fuch extensive jurisdiction as rendered them not only formidable to the Emperors, but disposed them to favour any attempt to circumscribe their power. He foresaw that the ecclefiasticks of Germany, raised almost to a level with its Princes, were ready to support any person who would stand forth as the protector of their privileges and independance. With both of these Gregory negociated, and had secured many devoted adherents among them, before he ventured to enter the lifts against the head of the Empire.

Pfeffel. abrege, p. 120, 152. Lib. Feudor, tit. 4.

SECT. III.

The contests herween the Popes and Empurors, and the confequences of these.

HE began his rupture with Henry IV. upon a pretext that was popular and plaufible. He complained of the venality and corruption with which the Emperor had granted the investiture of benefices to ecclesiasticks. He contended that this right belonged to him as head of the church; he required Henry to confine himself within the bounds of his civil jurisdiction, and to abstain for the future from such facrilegious encroachment on his spiritual dominion. All the censures of the church were denounced against Henry, because he refused to relinquish those powers which his predecessors had uniformly exercised. The most considerable of the German Princes and ecclesiasticks were excited to take arms against him. His mother, his wife, his fons were wrought upon to difregard all the ties of blood as well SECT. III. as of duty, and to join the party of his enemies k. Such were the fuccessful arts with which the court of Rome inflamed the superstitious zeal and conducted the factious spirit of the Germans and Italians, that an Emperor, distinguished not only for many virtues, but poilefied of confiderable talents, was at length obliged to appear as a supplicant at the gate of the castle in which the Pope resided, and to stand there, three days, barefooted, in the depth of winter, imploring a pardon, which A. D. 1017. at length he obtained with difficulty [RR].

This act of humiliation degraded the Imperial dignity. Nor was the depression only momentary. The contest between Gregory and Henry gave rife to the two great factions of the Guelfs and Ghibellines; the former of which supporting the pretentions of the Popes, and the latter defending the rights of the Emperor, kept Germany and Italy in perpetual agitation during three centuries. A regular fystem for humbling the Emperors and circumscribing their power was formed, and ad- The Imperial hered to uniformly throughout that period. The Popes, the gradually defree States in Italy, the nobility and ecclefiafticks of Germany, were all interested in its success; and notwithstanding the return of some short intervals of vigour, under the administration of a few able Emperors, the Imperial authority continued to decline. During the anarchy of the long interregnum subsequent to the A. D. 1256. death of William of Holland, it dwindled down to nothing. Rodulph of Hapsburgh, the founder of the house of Austria, A. D. 1273. and who first opened the way to its future grandeur, was at authority

* Annal. German. ap. Struv. i. p. 325. [RR] NOTE XL.

Vol. I.

length

SECT. III. length elected Emperor, not that he might re-establish and extend the Imperial authority, but because his territories and influence were fo inconfiderable as not to excite the jealoufy of the German Princes, who were willing to preserve the forms of a conflitution, the power and vigour of which they had deflroyed. Several of his fuccessors were placed on the Imperial? throne from the same motive; and almost every remaining prerogative was wrested out of the hands of feeble Princes unable to exercise or to defend them.

A total change in the political con-Ritution of the Empire.

DURING this period of turbulence and confusion the constitution of the Germanick body underwent a total change. The ancient names of courts and magistrates, together with the original forms and appearance of policy were preserved; but such new privileges and jurisdiction were assumed, and so many various rights chablished, that the same species of government no longer sub-The Princes, the great nobility, the dignified ecclefiaflicks, the free cities had taken advantage of the interregnum, which I have mentioned, to establish or to extend their usurpations. They claimed and exercised the right of governing their respective territories with full sovereignty. They acknowledged no superior with respect to any point, relative to the interior administration and police of their domains. They enacted laws, imposed taxes, coined money, declared war, concluded peace, and exerted every prerogative peculiar to independant States. The ideas of order and political union which had formed the various provinces of Germany into one body were entirely lost; and the fociety must have dissolved, if the forms of feudal subordination had not preferved fuch an appearance of connection or dependance dependance among the various members of the community, Sec. as preserved it from falling to pieces.

STATE OF EUROPE.

Expedients for putting and to this state of Thus bond of union, however, was extremely feeble; and no reinciple remained in the German constitution of sufficient force maintain publick order, and hardly to afcertain personal security. From the accession of Rodulph of Hapsburgh, to the reignof Maximilian, the immediate predecessor of Charles V. the Empire felt every calamity which a state must endure when the authority of government is so much relaxed as to have lost all The causes of diffention among that vast number of vigour. members which composed the Germanick body, were infinite and unavoidable. These gave rise to perpetual private wars, carried on with all the violence of refentment when unrestrained by superior authority. Rapine, outrage, exactions, became universal, Commerce was interrupted; industry suspended; and every part of Germany refembled a country which an enemy had plundered and taid defolate'. The variety of expedients employed with a view to restore order and tranquillity, prove that the grievances occasioned by this state of anarchy had grown intolerable. Arbiters were appointed to terminate the diffe-The cities united in a league, rences among the feveral states. the object of which was to check the rapine and extortions of the nobility. The nobility formed confederacies, on purpole to maintain tranquillity among their own order. Germany was divided into feveral Circles, in each of which a provincial and partial jurisdiction was established, to supply the place of a publick and common tribunal ".

¹ See above, page 45 and note xxi. Datt. de pace publica Imper. p. 25, no. 53. p. 28, no. 26. p. 35, no. 11.

[&]quot; Datt. passim. Struv. Corp. Hist. i. 510, &c.

to demonstrate the violence of that anarchy which prevailed, and

SECT. III. Bur all these remedies were so fruitless, that they served only Particularly by the Institution of the Imperial Coamber.

A. D. 1495.

the inefficacy of the means employed to correct it. At length Maximilian, by instituting the Imperial chamber, a tribunal composed of judges named partly by the Emperor, partly by the feveral States, and vested with authority to decide finally concerning all differences among the members of the Germanick body, re-established publick order in the Empire.

A few years after, by giving a new form to the Aulick council, A. D. 1512. which takes cognizance of all feudal causes, and such as belongto the Emperor's immediate jurisdiction, he restored some degree of vigour to the Imperial authority.

At the beginsing of the fixteenth century, the Empire an allociation of lovereign flates.

But notwithstanding the salutary effects of these regulations: and improvements, the political constitution of the German Empire, at the commencement of the period of which I propose to write the history, was of a species so peculiar, as not to resemble perfectly any form of government known either in the ancient or modern world. It was a complex body, formed by the affociation of several States, each of which possessed sovereign and independant jurisdiction within its own territories. Of all the members which composed this united body, the Emperor was the head. In his name, all decrees and regulations with respect to points of common concern, were issued; and to him the power of carrying them into execution was committed. But this appearance of monarchical power in the Emperor was more than counterbalanced by the influence and authority of the Princes and States of the Empire in every act of administration. No law extending to the whole body could pass, no resolution that affected the general interest could be taken, without the approbation t probation of the Diet of the Empire. . In this affembly, every SECT. III. dovereign Prince and State of the Germanick body had a right to be present, to deliberate, and to vote. The decrees or Recelles of the Diet were the laws of the Empire, which the Emperor was bound to ratify and enforce.

UNDER this aspect the constitution of the Empire appears a Poculiarities regular confederacy, fimilar to the Achæan league in ancient of this affo-Greece, or to that of the United Provinces and of the Swifs cantons in modern times. But if viewed in another light, striking peculiarities in its political state present themselves. The Germanick body was not formed by the union of members altogether diffinct and independent. All the Princes and States joined in this affociation, were originally subject to the Emperors, and acknowledged them as fovereigns. Besides this, they originally held their lands as Imperial fiefs, and in consequence of this tenure owed the Emperors all those services which feudal vassals are bound to perform to their liege lord. But though this political subjection was entirely at an end, and the influence of the feudal relation much diminished, the ancient forms and institutions introduced when the Emperors governed Germany with authority, not inferior to that which the other monarchs of Europe possessed, still remained. Thus an opposition was established between the genius of the government, and the forms of administration in the German Empire. The former considered the Emperor only as the head of a confederacy, the members of which, by their voluntary choice, have raised him to that dignity; the latter seemed to imply, that he is really invested with fovereign power. By this circumstance, such principles of The desertion the constihostility and discord were interwoven in the frame of the Ger- tution of the manick Empire.

SECT.HI. manick body, as affected each of its members, rendering their interior union incomplete, and their external offorts feeble and irregular. The effects of this vice or disorder inherent in the constitution of the Empire are so considerable, that, without attending to them, it is impossible to comprehend many transactions in the reign of Charles V. or to form just ideas concerning the genius of the German government.

Arising from the limited power of the Emperore.

THE Emperors of Germany, at the beginning of the fixteenth century, were distinguished by the most pompous titles, and by fuch enfigns of dignity as intimated their authority to be superior to that of all other monarchs. The greatest Princes of the Empire attended and ferved them on some occasions, as the officers They exercifed prerogatives which no of their houshold. other fovereign ever claimed. They retained pretenfions to all the extensive powers which their predecessors had enjoyed in any former age. But at the fame time, inflead of poffelling that ample domain which had belonged to the ancient Emperors of Germany, and which stretched from Basil to Cologne, along both banks of the Rhine", they were stript of all territorial property, and had not a fingle city, a fingle caffle, a fingle foot of land, that pertained to them as heads of the Empire. As their domain was alienated, their flated revenues were reduced almost to nothing; and the extraordinary aids which on a few occasions they obtained, were granted sparingly, and paid with reluctance. The Princes and States of the Empire, though they feemed to recognize the Imperial authority, were subjects only in name, each of them possessing a compleat municipal jurisdiction within the precincts of his own territorics.

Pfeffel. Abrege, &c. p. 241.

FROM this ill-compacted frame of government, effects that SECT. III. were unavoidable refulted. The Emperors, dazzled with the splendour of their titles, and the exterior figns of vast authority, were apt to imagine themselves to be the real sovereigns of Germany, and were led to aim continually at recovering the exercife of those powers and prerogatives which the forms of the constitution seemed to vest in them, and which their predecessors Charlemagne and the Otho's had actually enjoyed. The Princes and States, aware of the nature as well as extent of their pretenfions, were perpetually on their guard, in order to watch all the motions of the Imperial court, and to circumscribe its power within limits still more narrow. The Emperors, in support of their claims, appealed to ancient forms and institutions, which the States held to be obsolete. The States founded their rights on recent practice and modern privileges, which the Emperors confidered as usurpations.

From the natine of their titles and pre-

This jealoufy of the Imperial authority, together with the oppo- From the fition between it and the rights of the States, increased considerably from the time that the Emperors were elected, not by the collective body of German nobles, but by a few Princes of chief dignity. During a long period, all the members of the Germanick body affembled, and made choice of the person whom they appointed to be their head. But amidst the violence and anarchy which prevailed for several centuries in the Empire, seven Princes who possessed the most extensive territories, and who had obtained a hereditary title to the great offices of the State, acquired the exclusive privilege of nominating the Emperor. This right. was confirmed to them by the Golden Bull; the mode of exercifing it was afcertained, and they were dignified with the appellation of Ehelors. The nobility and free-cities being thus ftripped which they were classic.

SECT. III. Rripped of a privilege which they had once enjoyed, were lete connected with a Prince, towards whose elevation they had not contributed by their suffrages, and came to be more apprehensive of his authority. The Electors, by their extensive power, and the diffinguishing privileges which they possessed." became formidable to the Emperors, with whom they were placed almost on a level in several acts of jurisdiction. the introduction of the Electoral college into the Empire, and the authority which it acquired, instead of diminishing, contributed to strengthen the principles of hostility and discord in the Germanick constitution.

From the different forms of government ellablished in the States which composed the Germanick body.

THESE were further augmented by the various and repugnant forms of civil policy in the feveral States which composed the Germanick body. It is no easy matter to render the union of independant States perfect and entire, even when the genius and forms of their respective governments happen to be altogether fimilar. But in the German Empire, which was a confederacy of Princes, of Ecclefiafticks, and of free-cities, it was imposfible that they could incorporate thoroughly. The free-cities were small republicks, in which the maxims and spirit peculiar to that species of government prevailed. The Princes and nobles to whom supreme jurisdiction belonged, possessed a fort of monarchical power within their own territories, and the forms of their interior administration nearly resembled those of the great feudal kingdoms. The interests, the ideas, the objects of States so differently constituted, cannot be the same. Nor could their common deliberations be carried on with the same spirit, while the love of liberty and attention to commerce were the reigning principles in the cities; together with the defire of power and ardour for military military glory, were the governing passions of the Princes and SECT. III. nobility.

THE fecular and ecclefiaftical members of the Empire were From the opas little fitted for union as the free-cities and the nobility. Vaft territories were annexed to several of the German bishopricks and abbeys, and the dignified ecclefiafticks held fome of the highest offices in the Empire by hereditary right. The younger fons of noblemen of the second order, who had devoted themfelves to the church, were commonly promoted to these stations of eminence and power; and it was no small mortification to the Princes and great nobility to fee persons raised from an inferior rank to the same level with themselves, or even exalted to superior dignity. The education of these churchmen, the genius of their profession, and their connection with the court of Rome, rendered their character as well as interest different from those of the other members of the Germanick body, with whom they were called to act in concert. Thus another fource of jealoufy and variance was opened, which ought not to be overlooked when we are fearthing into the nature of the German constitution.

tween the fe-

To all these causes of differtion may be added one more, arifing from the unequal distribution of power and wealth among the States of the Empire. The electors, and other nobles of the highest rank, not only possessed sovereign jurisdiction, but governed fuch extensive, populous, and rich countries, as rendered them great Princes. Many of the other members, though they enjoyed all the rights of fovereignty, ruled over fuch petty domains, that their real power bore no proportion to this high prerogative. A well-compacted and vigorous confederacy could not

From the unequal difiribution of wealth and power among the micniber.

Vol. 1.

Bh

SECT. III. not be formed of fuch diffimilar flates. The weaker were jealous, timid, and unable either to affert or to defend their just privileges. The more powerful were apt to assume and to become oppressive. The Electors and Emperors endeavoured by turns to extend their own authority, by encroaching on the rights of these feeble members of the Germanick body; and they, over-awed or corrupted, tamely gave up their privileges, or meanly favoured the defigns formed against them [SS].

All these render the Germanick body incapable of acting with bne acing vigour.

AFTER contemplating all these principles of disunion and opposition in the conftitution of the German Empire, it will be easy to account for the want of concord and uniformity, conspicuous in its councils and proceedings. That flow, dilatory, distrustful and irresolute spirit, which characterizes all its deliberations, will appear natural in a body, the junction of whose members was fo incompleat, the different parts of which were held together by fuch feeble ties, and fet at variance by fuch powerful motives. But the Empire of Germany, nevertheless, comprehended countries of such vast extent, and was inhabited by fuch a martial and hardy race of men, that when the abilities of an Emperor, or zeal for any common cause, could rouze this unwieldy body to put forth its strength, it aded with irrefulible force. In the following history we shall find, that as the measures on which Charles V. was most intent, were often thwarted or rendered abortive by the spirit of jealousy and division peculiar to the Germanick constitution; fo it was by the influence which he acquired over the Princes of the Empire, and by engaging them to co-operate with him, that he was enabled to make fome of the greatest efforts which diffinguish his reign.

[SS] NOTE XI.I.

THE Turkish history is so blended, during the reign of Charles V. SECT. III. with the tof the great nations in Europe, and the Ottoman Porte View of the interpoled to often, and with fuch decifive influence, in the wars and negociations of the Christian Princes, that some previous account of the state of government in that great Empire, is no less necessary for the information of my readers, than these views of the constitution of other kingdoms which I have already exhibited to them.

IT has been the fate of the more fouthern and fertile parts of the origin. Asia, at different periods, to be conquered by that warlike and hardy race of men, who inhabit the vast country known to the ancients by the name of Scythia, and among the moderns by that of Tartary. One tribe of these people, called Turks or Turcomans, extended its conquests, under various leaders, and during feveral centuries, from the shore of the Caspian to the straits of the Dardanelles. Towards the middle of the fifteenth century, these formidable conquerors took Constantinople by florm, and established the seat of their government in that Imperial city. Greece, Moldavia, Walachia, and the other provinces of the ancient kingdoms of Thrace and Macedonia, together with part of Hungary, were subjected to their power.

Bur though the feat of the Turkish government was fixed in Its despotic Europe, and the Sultans obtained possession of such extensive dominions in that quarter of the globe, the genius of their policy was purely Afiatick; and may be properly termed a despotism, in contradiffinction to these monarchical and republican forms of government which we have been hitherto contemplating. supreme power was vested in Sultans of the Ottoman race,

SECT. 111. that bloodbeing deemed so facred, that no other was thought worthy of the throne. From this elevation, these sovereigns could look down, and behold all their subjects reduced to the same level before them. The maxims of Turkish policy admit not any of those inflications, which, in other countries, limit the exercise, or moderate the rigour of monarchical power. No great court with constitutional and permanent jurisdiction to interpose both in the enactment and execution of laws. No body of hereditary nobles, whose sense of their own pre-eminence, whose consciousness of what is due to their rank and character, whose jealousy of their privileges circumscribe the authority of the Prince, and ferve not only as a barrier against the excesses of his caprice, but fland as an intermediate order between him and the people. Under the Turkish government, the political condition of every subject is equal. To be employed in the service of the Sultan, is the only circumstance that confers distinction. Even this distinction is annexed so closely to the stations in which persons serve, that it is scarce communicated to those who are placed in them. The highest dignity in the Empire does not give any rank or pre-eminence to the family of him who enjoys it. As every man, before he is raifed to any station of authority, must go through the preparatory discipline of a long and servile obedience, the moment he is deprived of power, he and his posterity return to the same condition with other subjects, and fink back into obscurity. It is the distinguishing and odious characteriffick of the Eastern despotism, that it annihilates all other ranks of men, in order to exalt the monarch; that it leaves nothing to the former, while it gives every thing to the latter; that it endeavours to fix in the minds of those who are subject to it, the idea of no relation between men, but that of a master and of SECT. HI. a flave, the former destined to command and to punish, the latter formed to tremble and to obey [TT].

State of the Turkish Empire by Rycaut, p. 25.

But as there are circumstances which frequently obstruct or Power of the Sulan limited. defeat the falutary effects of the best-regulated governments, by religion ; there are others which contribute to mitigate the evils of the most vicious forms of policy. There can, indeed, be no conftitutional reftraints on the will of a Prince in a despotic government; but there may be fuch as are accidental. Absolute as the Turkish Sultans are, they feel themselves circumscribed both by religion, the principle on which their authority is founded, and by the army, the inftrument which they must employ in order to maintain it. Wherever religion interposes, the will of the Sovereign must submit to its decrees. When the Koran hath prescribed any religious rite; hath enjoined any moral duty; or hath confirmed, by its fanction, any political maxim, the command of the Sultan cannot overturn that which an higher authority hath established. restriction, however, on the will of the Sultans, is imposed by the military power. An armed force must surround the throne and by the of every Despot, to maintain his authority, and to execute his military commands. As the Turks extended their empire over nations, which they did not exterminate, but reduce to subjection, they found it necessary to render their military establishment numerous and formidable. Amurath, their third Sultan, in order to Origin of the form a body of devoted troops, that might ferve as the imme- A.D. 1362. diate guards of his person and dignity, appointed his officers to feize annually, as the Imperial property, the fifth part of the

[TT] NOTE XLIL P Rycaut, p. 8.

youtle

SECT.III. youth taken in war. These, after being instructed in the Mahometan religion, inured to obedience by fevere discipline, and trained to warlike exercises, were formed into a body distinguithed by the name of Janizaries, or new foldiers. Every fentiment which enthusiasm can inspire, every mark of distinction that the favour of the Prince could confer, were employed in order to animate this body with martial ardour, and with a consciousness of its own pre-eminence. The Janizaries soon became the chief strength and pride of the Ottoman armies; and by their number as well as reputation, were diffinguished above all the troops, whose duty it was to attend on the person of the Sultans [UU].

Their vaft infloence in the Turkish government.

Thus, as the supreme power in every society is possessed by those who have arms in their hands, this formidable body of foldiers, deflined to be the inftruments of enlarging the Sultan's authority, acquired, at the same time, the means of controlling The Janizaries in Conflantinople, like the Prætorian bands in ancient Rome, quickly perceived all the advantages which they derived from being stationed in the capital; from their union under one standard; and from being masters of the person of the Prince. The Sultans became no less sensible of their influence and importance. The Capiculy, or foldiery of the Porte, was the only power in the Empire that a Sultan or his Visier had reason to dread. To preferve the fidelity and attachment of the Janizavies, was the great art of government, and the principal object of attention in the policy of the Ottoman court. Under a monarch, whose abilities and vigour of mind fit him for command, they are obsequious instruments; execute whatever he enjoins; and render his power irrefistible. Under seeble Sect. III. Princes, or fuch as are unfortunate, they become turbulent and mutinous; assume the tone of masters; degrade and exalt Sultans at pleasure; and teach those to tremble, on whose nod, at other times, life or death depend.

> 5 Prince Cantemir's History of the Othman Empire, p. 87. [UU] NOTE XL'II.

FROM Mahomet II. who took Constantinople, to Solyman, who began his reign a few months after Charles V. was placed on the Imperial throne, a fuccession of illustrious Princes ruled over the Turkish Empire. By their great abilities, they kept their subjects of every order, military as well as civil, submissive to government; and had the abfolute command of whatever force their vast Empire was able to exert. Solyman, in particular, who is known to the Christians chiefly as a conqueror, but is celebrated in the Turkish annals as the great law-giver who established order and police in their Empire, governed during his long reign with no lefs authority than wifdom. He divided his dominions into feveral districts; he appointed the number of foldiers which each should furnish; he appropriated a certain proportion of the lands in every province for their maintenance; he regulated, with a minute accuracy, every thing relative to their discipline, their arms, and the nature of their He put the finances of the Empire into an orderly train of administration; and though the taxes in the Turkish dominions, as well as in the other despotic monarchies of the East, are far from being confiderable, he supplied that defect by an attentive and fevere economy.

Progress of the Tucks towards domini m.

NOR was it only under fuch Sultans as Solyman, whose talents were no less adapted to preserve interior order, than to conduct the operations of war, that the Turkith Empire engaged Advantages . which they politted over the Christian towers in the fixteenth cen-

with

SECT. III. with advantage in its contests with the Christian states. long succession of able Princes, which I have mentioned, had given such vigour and firmness to the Ottoman government, that it seems to have attained, during the fixteenth century, the highest degree of perfection of which its constitution was capable. Whereas the great monarchies in Christendom were still far from that state, which could enable them to act with a full exertion of their force. Besides this, the Turkish troops in that age possessed every advantage which arises from superiority in military discipline. At the time when Solyman began his reign, the Janizaries had been embodied near a century and a half, and during that long period the severity of their military discipline had in no degree relaxed. The foldiers drawn from the provinces of the Empire had been kept almost continually under arms, in the various wars which the Sultans had carried on with hardly any interval of peace. Against troops thus trained and accustomed to service, the forces of the Christian powers took the field with great disadvantage. The most intelligent as well as impartial authors of the fixteenth century, acknowledge and lament the superior attainments of the Turks in the military art. [XX] The success which uniformly attended their arms in all their wars, demonstrates the justness of this observation. The Christian armies did not acquire that superiority over the Turks, which they now possess, until the long establishment of standing forces had improved military discipline among the former; and until various causes and events, which it is not my province to explain. had corrupted or abolished their ancient warlike institutions among the latter.

P R O O F S

AND

ILLUSTRATIONS.

were the first of the barbarians who invaded Spain. It was one of the richest and most populous of the Roman Provinces; the inhabitants had been distinguished for courage, and had defended their liberty against the arms of Rome, with greater obstinacy, and during a longer course of years, than any nation in Europe. But so entirely were they enervated by their fubjection to the Romans, that the Vandals who entered the kingdom A. D. 409. compleated the conquest of it with such rapidity, that in the year 411, these barbarians divided it among them by casting lots. The desolation occasioned by their invafion is thus described by Idatius an eye witness. "The barbarians wasted every thing with hostile cruelty. The pestilence was no less destructive. A dreadful famine raged, to such a degree, that the living were conftrained to feed on the dead bodies of their fellow citizens; and all these terrible plagues desolated at once the unhappy kingdoms." Idatii Chron. ap. Biblioth. Patrum. vol. vii. p. 1233. edit. Lugd. 1677. The Goths having attacked the Vandals in their new fettlements, a fierce war enfued; the country was plundered by both parties; the cities which at first escaped were laid in afhes, and the inhabitants exposed to fuffer every thing that the wanton cruelty of barbarians could inflict. Idatius describes these, ibid. p. 1235. b. 1236. c. f. A fimilar account of their devastations is given by Isidorus Hispalensis, and the contemporary writers. Isid. Chron. ap. Grot. hist. Goth. 732. Spain the Vandals passed over to Africa, A. D. 428. Africa was, next to Egypt, the most fertile of the Roman provinces. It was one of the granaries of the Empire, and is called by an ancient writer, the foul of the commonwealth. Though the army with which they invaded it, did not exceed 30,000 fighting ing men, they became absolute masters of the province in less than two years. A contemporary author gives a dreadful account of the havock which they made: "They found a province well cultivated, and enjoying plenty, the beauty of the whole earth. They carried their destructive arms into every corner of it; they dispeopled it by their devastations; exterminating every thing with fire and fword. They did not even spare the vines, and fruit trees, that those to whom caves and inaccessible mountains had afforded a retreat, might find no nouriflement of any kind. Their hostile rage could not be fatiated, and there was no place exempted from the effects of it. They tortured their prisoners with the most exquisite cruelty, that they might force from them a discovery of their hidden treasures. The more they discovered, the more they expected, and the more implacable they became. Neither the infirmities of age nor of fex; neither the dignity of nobility, nor the fanctity of the facerdotal office, could mitigate their fury: but the more illustrious their pritoners were, the more barbaroully they infulted them. The publick buildings which refisted the violence of the flames, they levelled with the ground. They left many cities without an inhabitant. When they approached any fortified place, which their undisciplined army could not reduce, they gathered together a multitude of prisoners, and putting them to the fword, left their bodies unburied, that the flench of the carcaffes might oblige the garrifon to abandon it." Victor Vitensis de persecutione Africana ap. Bibl. Patrum. vol. viii. p. 666. St. Augustin an African, and a contemporary author gives a fimilar deteription of their cruclties, opera v. x. p. 372. edit. 1616. Aban an hundred years after the settlement of the Vandals and difpossessed.

possessed them. Procopius, a contemporary historian, describes the devastation which that war occasioned. " Africa, says he. was so entirely dispeopled, that one might travel several days in it without meeting one man; and it is no exaggeration to fay, that in the course of the war five millions of persons perished." Proc. hist. Arcana cap. 18. ap. Byz. Script. vol. i. 315. ____ I have dwelt longer upon the calamities of this province, because they are described not only by contemporary authors, but by eyewitnesses. The present state of Africa confirms their testimony. Many of the most flourishing and populous cities with which it was filled, were so entirely ruined, that no vestiges remain to point out where they were fituated. That fertile territory which sustained the Roman Empire lies in a great measure uncultivated; and that province, which Victor in his barbarous Latin called Speciositas totius terræ florentis, is now the retreat of pirates and banditti.

WHILE the Vandals laid waste one part of the Empire, the Huns desolated the rest of it. Of all the barbarous tribes they were the fiercest and most formidable. Ammianus Marcellinus a contemporary author, and one of the best of the later historians, gives an account of their policy and manners. They nearly resemble those of the Scythians described by the ancients, and of the Tartars known to the moderns. In some parts of their character, and in feveral of their customs, they retemble the favages in North America. Their passion for war and action was extreme. "As in polished focieties (fays Ammianus) case and tranquillity are courted, they delight in war and dan-He who falls in battle is reckoned happy. They who die of old age or of disease are deemed infamous. Vol. I. D d boaft, hoaft, with the utmost exultation, of the number of enemies whom they have flain, and as the most glorious of all ornaments, they fasten the scalps of those who have fallen by their hand to the trappings of their horses." Aminian. Marc. lib. xxxi. p. 477. edit. Gronov. Ludg. 1693. — Their incursions into the Empire began in the fourth century; and the Romans, though no strangers, by that time, to the effects of barbarous rage, were aftonished at the cruelty of their devastations. Thrace, Pannonia, and Illyricum were the countries which they first laid desolate. As they had no thoughts of settling in Europe, their inroads were frequent, and Procopius computes that in each of these, at a medium, two hundred thousand persons perished or were carried off as flaves. Procop. hist. Arcan. ap. Byz. fcript. vol. i. 346. Thrace, the best cultivated province in that quarter of the Empire, was converted into a defert, and when Priscus accompanied the ambassadors sent to Attila, there were no inhabitants in some of the cities, but a few miferable people who had taken shelter among the ruins of the churches; and the fields were covered with the bones of those who had fallen by the fword. Prifcus ap. Byz. Script. vol. i. 34. Attila became King of the Huns. A. D. 434. He is one of the greatest and most enterprizing conquerors mentioned in history. He extended his Empire over all the vast countries, comprehended under the general names of Scythia and Germany in the ancient divition of the world. While he was carrying on his wars against the barbarous nations, he kept the Roman Empire under perpetual apprehensions, and extorted vast subsidies from the timid and effeminate monarchs who governed it. In the year 451, he entered Gaul, at the head of an army composed of all the various nations which he had subducek

It was more numerous than any with which the barbarians had hitherto invaded the Empire. The devaluations which he committed were horrible; not only the open country, but the most slourishing cities were desolated. The extent and crucity of his devastations are described by Salvianus de Gubernat Dei. edit. Baluz. Par. 1669. p. 139, &c. and by Idatius ubi supra p. 1235. Actius put a stop to his progress in that country by the famous battle of Chalons, in which (if we may believe the historians of that age) three hundred thousand perfons perished. Idat. ibid. Jornandes de rebus Geticis ap. Gret. hist. Gothor. p. 671. Amst. 1665. But next year he resolved to attack the centre of the Empire, and marching into Italy, wasted it with rage, inflamed by the sense of his late disgrace. What Italy suffered by the Huns exceeded all the calamities which the preceding incursions of the barbarians had brought upon it. 'Conringius has collected feveral passages from the ancient historians, which prove that the devastations committed by the Vandals and Huns in the countries fituated on the banks of the Rhine, were no less cruel and fatal to the human race. Exercitațio de urbibus Germaniæ. Opera, vol. i. 489. But it is endless, it is shocking to follow these destroyers of mankind through fo many scenes of horror, and to contemplate the havock which they made of the human species.

BUT the flate in which Italy appears to have been, during feveral ages, after the barbarous nations fettled in it, is the most decifive proof of the cruelty as extent of their devaflations. Whenever any country in thinky inhabited, trees and thrubs foring up in the unculargate fields, and spreading by Dda well

degrees

degrees form large forests; by the overflowing of rivers, and the flagnating of waters, other parts of it are converted into lakes and marthes. Ancient Italy, the feat of the Roman elegance and luxury, was cultivated to the highest pitch. so effectually did the devastations of the barbarians destroy all the effects of their industry and cultivation, that in the eighth century Italy appears to have been covered with forests and marihes of vast extent. Muratori enters into a long detail concerning the fituation and limits of these; and proves by the most authentick evidence, that great tracts of territory, in all the different provinces of Italy, were either over-run with wood, or laid under water. Nor did these occupy parts of the country naturally barren or of little value, but were spread over districts, which ancient writers represent as extremely fertile, and which at present are highly cultivated. Muratori antiquitates Italicæ medii ævi dissert. xxi. v. ii. p. 149, 153, &c. firong proof of this occurs in a description of the city of Modena, by an author of the tenth century. Murat. script. Rerum Italic. vol. ii. pars. ii. p. 601. The state of desolation in other countries of Europe seems to have been the same. In many of the most early charters now extant, the lands granted to monasteries or to private persons, are distinguished into such as are cultivated or inhabited, and fuch as were eremi, defolate. many inflances, lands are granted to perfons because they had taken them from the defert, ab eremo, and had cultivated and planted them with inhabitants. This appears from a charter of Charlemagne, published by Eckhart de rebus Franciæ Orientalis. vol. ii. p. 864, and from many charters of his successors quoted by Du Cange voc. Exercise

MURATORI adds, that during the eighth and ninth centuries, Italy was greatly infested by wolves and other wild beatls another mark of its being destitute of inhabitants. Murat Autique vol. ii. p. 163. Thus Italy, the pride of the ancient world for its fertility and cultivation, was reduced to the state of a country newly peopled, and rendered habitable.

I AM sensible, not only that some of the descriptions of the devastations which I have quoted, may be exaggerated, but that the barbarous tribes proceeded in different manners, in making their new settlements. Some of them seemed to be bent on exterminating the ancient inhabitants; others were more disposed to incorporate with them. It is not my province either to enquire into the causes which occasioned this variety in the conduct of the conquerors, or to describe the state of those countries where the ancient inhabitants were treated most mildly. The facts which I have produced are sufficient to prove that the destruction of the human species, occasioned by their hostile invasions of the northern nations, and their subsequent settlements, was much greater than the generality of writers seem to imagine.

NOTE VI. SECT. I. p. 13. [F]

I HAVE observed, Note II. that our only certain information concerning the ancient state of the barbarous nations must be derived from the Greek and Roman writers. Happily an account of the institutions and customs of one people, to which those of all the rest seem to have been in a great measure similar, has been transmitted to us by two authors, the most capable, perhaps, that ever wrote, of observing them with profound discernment, and of describing them with propriety and force. The reader must perceive perceive that I have Cæsar and Tacitus in my eye. The former gives a short account of the ancient Germans in a few chapters of the fixth book of his commentaries: The latter wrote a treatise expressly on that subject. These are the most precious and instructive monuments of antiquity to the present inhabitants of Europe. From them we learn,

1. THAT the state of Society among the ancient Germans was of the rudest and most simple form. They subsisted entirely by hunting or by pasturage. Cass. lib. vi. c. 21. They neglected agriculture, and lived chiefly on milk, cheefe, and flesh. c. 22. Tacitus agrees with him in most of these points; de morib. Cerm. c. 14, 15, 23. The Goths were equally negligent of agriculture. Prifc. Rhet. ap. Byz. Script. v. i. p. 31. B. Society was in the same state among the Huns, who disdained to cultivate the earth, or to touch a plough. Amm. Marcel. lib. xxxi. p. 475. The fame manners took place among the Alans; ibid. p. 477.. While fociety remains in this fimple state, men by uniting together scarce relinquith any portion of their natural independance. Accordingly we are informed, 2. That the authority of civil government was extremely limited among the Germans. During times of peace they had no common or fixed magistrate, but the chief men of every district dispensed justice, and accommodated differences. Cxf. ibid. c. 23. Their Kings had not absolute or unbounded power; their authority consisted rather in the privilege of adviling, than in the power of commanding. Matters of small consequence were determined by the chief men; affairs of importance by the whole community. Tacit. c. 7, 11. The Huns, in like manner, deliberated in common concerning every bufiness of moment to the society; and were not subject to the rigour of regal authority. Amm. Marcel.

lib. xxxi. p. 474. 3. Every individual among the antient Germans was left at liberty to chuse whether he would take with in any military enterprize which was proposed; there were to have been no obligation to engage in it impoled on him by putlick authority. "When any of the thief men propoles any oxpedition, such as approve of the cause and of the leader rise up, and declare their intention of following him; and those who do not fulfil this engagement, are confidered as deferters and traitors, and are looked upon as infamous." Cæs. ibid. c. 23. Tacitus plainly points at the same custom, though in terms more obleure. Tacit. c. 11. 4. As every individual was so independant, and master in so great a degree of his own actions, it became, of confequence, the great object of every person among the Germans who aimed at being a leader, to gain adherents, and attach them to his person and interest. These adherents Cæsar calls Ambacti and Clientes, i. e. retainers or clients; Tacitus, Comites, or companions. The chief dillinction and power of the leaders, confifted in being attended by a numerous band of chosen youth. This was their pride as well as ornament during peace, and their defence in war. The favour of these retainers the leaders gained or preferved by prefents of armour, and of horses; or by the profuse, though inelegant hospitality, with which they entertained them. Tacit. c. 14, 15. 5. Another confequence of the personal liberty and independance which the Germans retained, even after they united in fociety, was their circumferibing the criminal jurisdiction of the magistrate within very narrow limits, and their not only claiming but exercifing almost all the rights of private resentment and revenge. Their magifirates had not the power either of imprisoning, or of inflicting any corporal punishment on a free man. Facit. c. 7. Every person was obliged to avenge the wrongs which his parents or friends had sustained. Their enmities were hereditary, but not irreconcileable. Even murder was compensated by paying a certain number of cattle. Tac. c. 21. A part of the sine went to the King, or state, a part to the person who had been injured, or to his kindred. Ibid. c. 12.

THESE particulars concerning the inflitutions and manners of the Germans, though well known to every person conversant in ancient literature, I have thought proper to arrange in this order, and to lay before such of my readers as may be less acquainted with these facts, both because they confirm the account which I have given of the state of the barbarous nations, and tend to illustrate all the observations that I shall have occasion to make concerning the various changes in their government and customs. The laws and customs introduced by the barbarous nations into their new settlements, are the best commentary on the writings of Cassar and Tacitus; and their observations are the best key to a perfect knowledge of these laws and customs.

ONE circumstance with respect to the testimonies of Cæsar and Tacitus concerning the Germans, merits attention. Cæsar wrote his brief account of their manners more than an hundred years before Tacitus composed his treatise de motibus Germanorum. An hundred years make a considerable period in the progress of national manners, especially if, during that time, those people who are rude and unpolished have had much communication with more civilized states. This was the case with the Germans. Their intercourse with the Romans began when Cæsar crossed the Rhine, and increased prodigiously during the interval interval between that event and the time when I acide deposited. Believe this, there was a confidential difference between the lister of fociety among the different tribes of Garciana. The believes were to much improved that they began to be besidential. The cap. 44. The Fenni were to barbares, that it is wenderful how they were able to subfift. Ibid, cap. 46. Whenver undertakes to describe the manners of the Cermans, or to found any political theory upon the state of foreign among them, ought carefully to attend so both these circumstances.

BEFORE I quit this subject, it may not be improper to obferve, that though successive afterations in their institutions, together with the gradual progress of refinement, have made an entire change in the manners of the various people, who conquered the Roman Empire, there is still one race of men nearly in the same political situation with that in which they were when they first settled in their new conquests: I mean the various tribes and nations of Savages in North America. It cannot then be considered either as a digression, or as an improper indulgence of curiosity to enquire, whether this similarity in their political state has occasioned any resemblance between their character and manners. If the likeness turns out to be striking, it is a stronger proof that a just account has been given of the ancient inhabitants of Europe, than the testimony even of Cæsar or of Tacitus.

Some tribes neglect agraciants could have by numbing and fishing. Some tribes neglect agraciants could have have the hours there who cultivate fome finall from non-line forms. The first tribes the property of the performance of the property of the property of the performance of men being few, and their mutual depositence upon sails white fmall, their union is extremely imperfect and feeble, and they continue to enjoy their manual liberty almost unimpaired. The the first idea of an American, that every man is born free and independent, and that no newer on earth hath any right to diminish or circumscribe his natural liberty. There is scarce any appearance of subordination either in civil or dometic govern-Every one does what he pleases. A father and mother with their children, live like persons whom chance has brought together, and whom no common bond unites. Their manner of educating their children is fuitable to this principle. They never chastise or punish them, even during their infancy. As they advance in years, they allow them to be entirely masters of their own actions, and responsible to no body. Id. p. 272, 273. 2. The power of their civil magistrates is extremely limited. Among most of their tribes, the Sachem or chief is elective. council of old men is chosen to assist him, without whose advice he determines no affair of importance. The Sachems neither possession any great degree of authority. They propose and intreat rather than command. The obedience of their people is altogether voluntary. Id. p. 266, 268. _____3. They engage in any military enterprize, not from confirmint, but choice. When war is resolved, a chief arises, and offers himself to be the leader. They who are willing (for they compel no person) fland up one after another, and fing their war fong. But if after this, any of these should refuse to follow the leader, to whom they have engaged, his life would be in danger, and he would be confidered as the most infamous of all men. Id. p. 217, 218. 4. Such as engage to make any leader, expect to be treated by him with great attended and respect; and he is obliged to make them prefents of temperable value. Id. p. 218. 5. Among

5. Among the Americans, the magistrate has feather enveriminal perildiction. Id. 272. Then receiving my injury, the perion or family offended may inflict what providence they picate on the person who was the author of it. Id. p. 174. Their referement and defire of stageance are emplise and implecable. Time can neither extinguish or shate it. It is the chief inheritance parents leave to their children; it is transmitted from generation to generation, until an occasion be found of satisfying it. M. p. 300. Sometimes, however, the offended party is appealed. compensation is paid for a munder that has been committed. The relations of the deceafed receive it; and it consists most commonly of a captive taken in war, who being substituted in place of the person who was murdered, assumes his name, and is adopted into his family. Id. p. 274. The resemblance holds in many other particulars. It is fufficient for my purpose to have pointed out the fimilarity of those great features which diffinguish and characterize both people. Bochart, and other philologifts of 'he last century, who, with more erudition than science, endeavoured to trace the migrations of various nations, and who were apt, upon the flightest appearance of resemblance, to find an affinity between nations far removed from each other, and to conclude that they were descended from the same ancestors, would hardly have failed, on viewing fuch an amazing fimilarity, to pronounce with confidence, "That the Germans and Americans must be the same people." But a philosopher will satisfy himself with observing. "That the characters of nations depends on the flate of fociety in which they live, and on the political institutions established among them, and that the human mind, whenever it is placed in the fame hiverion, will, in ages the most distant, and in countries the mole sense; assume the same form, and be distinguished by the same markers.

Americans no farther than was necessary for the illustration of my subject. I do not pretend that the state of society in the two countries was perfectly similar. Many of the German tribes were more civilized than the Americans. Some of them were not unacquainted with agriculture; almost all of them had slocks of tame cattle, and depended for the chief part of their substitute upon these. Most of the American tribes subsist by hunting, and are in a ruder and more simple state than the ancient Germans. The resemblance, however, between their condition is greater perhaps than any that we know between two races of men, and this has produced a surprizing similarity of manners.

NOTE VII. SECT. I. p. 13. [G]

THE booty gained by an army belonged to an army. King himself had no part of it but what he acquired by lot. remarkable instance of this occurs in the history of the Franks. The army of Clovis, the founder of the French monarchy, having plundered a church, carried off, among other facred utenfils, a vase of extraordinary size and beauty. The bishop sent deputies to Clovis, befeeching him to restore the vase, that it might be again employed in the facred fervices to which it had been confecrated. Clovis defired the deputies to follow him to Soiffons, as their booty was to be divided in that place, and promifed that if the lot should give him the disposal of the vase, he would grant what the bishop desired. When he came to Soissons, and all the booty was placed in one great heap in the middle of the army, Clovis intreated, that before making the division, they would give him that water over and above his share. All appeared willing to gratify the King, and to comply with his request, when. when a fierce and haughty soldier listed up his listele are, and striking the vase with the unnost violence, cried out with a doubt voice, "You shall receive nothing here but that to which the lot gives you a right." Gregor. Turon, Histor. Francorum. lib. ii. c. 27, p. 70. Par. 1610.

NOTE VIII. SECT. L. P. 15. [H]

THE history of the establishment and progress of the feudal fystem, is an interesting object to all the nations of Europe. In some countries, their jurisprudence and laws are still in a great measure feudal. In others, many forms and practices established by custom, or founded on statutes, took their rise from the feudal law, and cannot be understood without attending to the ideas Several authors of the highest reputation for peculiar to it. genius and erudition, have endeavoured to illustrate this subject, but they have left many parts of it obscure. I shall endeavour to trace, with precision, the progress and variation of ideas concerning property in land among the barbarous nations; and shall. attempt to point out the causes which introduced these changes, as well as the effects which followed upon them. Property in land feems to have gone through four fuccessive changes among the people who fettled in the various provinces of the Roman. Empire.

I. WHILE the barbarous nations remained in their original countries, they had no fixed property in land, and no certain limits to their possessions. After feeding their flocks in one district, they removed with them, their wives and families, to another; and abandoned that likewise in a short time. They were not, in consequence of this imperfect species of property, brought under any positive or formal obligation to serve the community; community; all their services were purely voluntary. Every individual was at liberty to chuse how far he would contribute towards carrying on any military enterprize. If he followed a leader in any expedition, it was from attachment, not from a sense of obligation. The clearest proof of this has been produced in note VI. While property continued in this state, we can discover nothing that bears any resemblance to a seudal tenure, or to the subordination and military service which the feudal system introduced.

II. UPON fettling in the countries which they subdued, the victorious army divided the conquered lands. That portion which fell to every foldier, he feized as a recompence due to his valour, as a settlement acquired by his own sword. He took possession of it as a freeman in full property. He enjoyed it during his own life, and could dispose of it at pleasure, or transmit it as an inheritance to his children. Thus property in land became fixed. It was at the same time allodial, i. e. the possessor had the entire right of property and dominion; he held of no fovereign or fuperior lord, to whom he was bound to do homage, and perform service. But as these new proprietors were in some danger (as has been observed in the text) of being disturbed by the remainder of the ancient inhabitants, and in still greater danger of being attacked by barbarians as fierce and rapacious as themselves, they saw the necessity of coming under obligations to defend the community, more explicit than those to which they had been subject in their original habitations. On this account, immediately upon their fixing in their new fettlements, every freeman became bound to take arms in defence of the community, and if he refused or neglected so to do, was liable to a confiderable fiderable penalty. I do not mean that any contraction this kind was formally concluded, or manually rapified by any legal folemnity. It was, like the other compacts which hold fociety together, exabilified by tacit confence and their mutual fecurity and preferration made it the interest of all to recognize its authority, and to enforce the observation of it. We can trace back this new obligation on the proprietors of land to a very early period in the history of the Franks. Chilperic, who began his reign A.D. 562, exacted a fine, bannos justit exigi, from certain persons who had refused to accompany him in an expedition. Gregor. Turon litz v. c. 26. p. 211. Childibert, who began his reign A. D. 576, proceeded in the fame manner against others who had been guilty of a like crime. Id. lib. vii, c. 42. p. 342. Charlemagne ordained, that every freeman who possessed sive mansi, i. e. fixty acres of land, in property, should march in perfon against the enemy. Capitul. A. D. 807. Louis le Debonnaire, A. D. 815, granted lands to certain Spaniards who fled from the Saracens, and allowed them to fettle in his territories. on condition that they should ferve in the army like other free Capitul. vol. i. p. 500. By land possessed in property, which is mentioned in the law of Charlemagne, we are to understand, according to the stile of that age, allodial land; allodes and proprietos, aludum and proprium being words perfectly fyno-Du Cange voce Alodis. The clearest proof of the dinimous. flinction between allodial and beneficiary possession, is contained in two charters published by Migratori, by which it appears that a person might possession part of his estate as allodial which he could dispose of at pleasure, the other as a beneficium, of which he had only the utility, the property returning to the superior Lord on his demile. Antiq. Ital. media in a Capitulare of Charlemegne, A. D. Big. edit. Baluz. vol. a. p. 491. In the curious reframent of count Everard, who married a daughter of Leuis le Debonnaire, by which he disposes of his vast estate among his children, he distinguishes between what he possessed proprietate, and what he held beneficio, and it appears that the greater part was allodial. A. D. 837. Aub. Mirzi Opera Diplomatica Lovan. 1723. Vol. p. 19.

In the same manner Liber homo is commonly opposed to Vassus or Vassallus; the former denotes an allodial proprietor, the latter one who held of a superior. These free men were under an obligation to serve the state; and this duty was confidered as fo facred, that free men were prohibited from entering into holy orders unless they had obtained the confent of the fovereign. The reason given for this in the statute is remarkable, " For we are informed that some do fo, not so much out of devotion, as in order to avoid that railitary service which they are bound to perform. Capitul. lib. i. §. 114. If upon being fummoned into the field, any free man refused to obey, a full Herebannum, i. c. a fine of fixty crowns, was to be exacted from him according to the law of the Franks." Capit. Car. magn. ap. Leg. Longob. lib. i. tit. 14. S. 13. p. 539. This expression, according to the law of the Franks, feems to imply that both the obligation to ferve, and the penalty on those who diffegurded it, were coeval with the laws made by the Franks at their fifth fettlement in Gaul. This fine was levied with the transmit. That if any perion was infolvent, he was reduced to lervitude, and continued in that flate until fuch time as his labour flould amount to the value of the berebannum." Ibid. The Emperor Lotharius rendered the penalty still more severe; and if any person possessing such an extent of property as made it incumbent on him to take the field in person refused to obey the summons, all his goods were declared to be forfeited, and he himself might be punished with banishment. Murat. Script. Ital. vol. i. pars ii. p. 153.

III. PROPERTY in land having thus become fixed and fubject to military fervice, another change was introduced, though flowly, and flep by flep. We learn from Tacitus that the chief men among the Germans endeavoured to attach to their perfons and interests certain adherents, whom he calls Comites. These fought under their standard, and followed them in all their enterprizes. The same custom continued among them in their new fettlements, and those attached or devoted followers were called fideles, antrustiones, homines in truste Dominica & leudes. Tacitus informs us, that the rank of a Comes was deemed honourable; De morib. Germ. c. 13. The composition, which is the standard by which we must judge of the rank and condition of persons in the middle ages, paid for the murder of one in trufte Dominica, was triple to that paid for the murder of a freeman. Leg. Salicor. Tit. 44. §. 1. & 2. While the Germans remained in their own country they courted the favour of these Comites by presents of arms and horses, and by hospitality. See note VI. While they had no fixed property in land, these were the only gifts that they could bellow, and the only reward which their followers defired. But upon their fettling in the countries which they conquered, and when the value of property came to be understood among them, instead Vol. I.

F f

of these slight presents, the Kings and chieftains bestowed a more fubfiantial recompence in land on their adherents. These grants were called beneficia, because they were gratuitous donations; and honores, because they were regarded as marks of diffinction. What were the fervices originally exacted in return for these beneficia cannot be determined with absolute precifion; because there are no records so ancient. When allodial possessions were first rendered feudal, they were not, at once, subjected to the feudal services. The transition here, as in all other changes of importance, was gradual. As the great object of a feudal vassal was to obtain protection, when allodial proprietors first consented to become vassals of any powerful leader, they continued to retain as much of their ancient independance as was confishent with that new relation. The homage which they did to the fuperior of whom they chose to hold, was called homagium planum, and bound them to nothing more than fidelity, but without any obligation either of military service, or attendance in the courts of their superior. Of this homagium planum some traces, though obscure, may still be discovered. Brussel, tom. i. p. 97. Among the antient writs published by D. D. De Vic & Vaisette hist. de Langued. are a great many which they call homagia. They feem to be an intermediate step between the homagium planum mentioned by Bruffel, and the engagement to perform compleat feudal fervice. The one party promifes protection, and grants certain castles or lands, the other engages to defend the person of the granter, and to affift him likewife in defending his property as often as he shall be summoned to do so. But these engagements are accompanied with none of the feudal formalities, and no mention is made of any of the feudal fervices. They appear rather rather to be a mutual contract between equals, than the engagement of a vassal to perform services to a superior Lord. Preuves de l'hist. de Lang. tom. ii. 173. & passim. As soon as men were accustomed to these, the other seudal services were gradually introduced. M. de Montesquieu considers these beneficia as fiefs, which originally subjected those who held them to military service. L'espr. des Loix. l. xxx. c. 3. & 16. M. L'abbè de Mably contends that such as held these were at first subjected to no other service than what was incumbent on every free man. Observations sur l'histoire de France I. 356. But upon comparing their proofs and reasonings and conjectures, it feems to be evident, that as every free man, in confequence of his allodial property, was bound to serve the conmunity under a fevere penalty, no good reafou can be affigned for conferring these beneficia, if they did not subject such as received them, to fome new obligation. Why should a King have stripped himself of his domain, if he had not expected, that, by parcelling it out, he might acquire a right to fervices to which he had formerly no title? We may then warrantably conclude, "That as allodial property subjected those who posfeffed it to ferve the community, so beneficia subjected such as held them, to personal service and fidelity to him from whom they received these lands. These beneficia were granted originally only during pleafure. No circumftance relating to the customs of the middle ages is better ascertained than this; and innumerable proofs of it might be added to these produced in L'esprit des Loix, l. xxx. c. 16. and by Du Cange voc. beneficium & feudum.

IV. But the possession of benefices did not continue long in this state. A precarious tenure during pleasure was not sufficient to satisfy and attach those who held it to their superior Lord, they soon obtained the confirmation of their benefices during life. Feudor, lib. tit. i. Du Cange produces several quotations from ancient charters and chronicles in proof of this; Gloss, voc. Beneficium. After this it was easy to obtain or extort charters rendering beneficia hereditary, sirst in the direct line, then in the collateral, and at last in the female line. Leg. Longob, lib. iii. tit. 8. Du Cange, voc. Beneficium.

It is no easy matter to fix the precise time when each of these changes took place. M. l'Ab. Mably conjectures with some probability, that Charles Martel first introduced the prac-Clice of granting beneficia for life: Observat. tom. i. p. 103, 160; and that Louis le Debonnaire was among the first who rendered them hereditary, is evident from the authorities to which he refers; Id. 429. Mabillon however has published a placitum of Louis le Debonnaire. A. D. 860. by which it appears that he still continued to grant some beneficia only during life. De re Diplomatica, lib. vi. p. 353. In the year 889, Odo King of France granted lands to Ricabodo fideli fuo jure beneficiario & fructuario during his own life; and if he should die, and a fon were born to him, that right was to continue during the life of his fon. Mabillon ut supra, p. 556. This was an intermediate step between fiel's merely during life, and fiefs hereditary to perpetuity. While beneficia continued under their fixit form, and were held entry during pleafure, he who who granted them not only exercised the Dominium or prerogative of superior Lord; but he retained the property, giving his vassal only the usus ruet. But under the latter form, when they became hereditary, although feudal lawyers continued to define a beneficium agreeably to its original nature, the property was in effect taken out of the hands of the superior Lord, and lodged in those of the vasfal. As soon as the reciprocal advantages of the feudal mode of tenure came to be understood by fuperiors as well as vaffals; that species of holding became fo agreeable to both, that not only lands, but casual rents, fuch as the profits of a toll, the fare paid at ferries, &c. the falaries or perquifites of offices, and even pensions themsclves, were granted and held as fiefs; and military service was promised and exacted on account of these. Morice Mem. pour servir de preuves a l'hist. de Bretagne. tom. ii. 78. 690. Brussel, tom. i. p. 41. How abfurd foever it may feem to grant or to hold fuch precarious and casual property as a fief; there are inflances of feudal tenures still more singular. The profits arising from the masses said at an altar were properly an ecclefiatlical revenue, belonging to the clergy of the church or monastry which performed that duty, but these were sometimes feized by the powerful barons. In order to afcertain their right to them, they held them as fiefs of the church, and parcelled them out in the same manner as other property to their subvassals. Bouquet recueil des hist. vol. x. 238. 480. The same spirit of encroachment which rendered fiefs hereditary, led the nobles to extort from their fovereigns hereditary grants of offices. Many of the great offices of the crown became hereditary in most of the kingdoms in Europe, and so conscious were monarchs of this spirit of usurpation among the nobility, and fo follicitous to guard against it, that, on some occasions, they obliged the persons whom they promoted to any office of dignity, to grant an obligation that neither they, nor their heirs, should claim it as belonging to them by hereditary right. remarkable instance of this is produced, Mem. de l'Acad. des Inscript. tom. xxx. p. 595. Another occurs in the Thesaur. anecdot. published by Martene & Durand. vol. i. p. 873.---This revolution in property occasioned a change corresponding to it in political government; the great vallals of the crown, as they acquired fuch extensive possessions, usurped a proportional degree of power, depressed the jurisdiction of the crown, and trampled on the privileges of the people. It is on account of this connection, that the tracing the progress of feudal property becomes an object of attention in history; for upon difcovering in what state property was at any particular period, we may determine with precision what was the degree of power possessed by the King or by the nobility at that juncture.

monarchs.

One circumstance more, with respect to the changes which property underwent, deserves attention. I have shewn that when the various tribes of barbarians divided their conquests in the fifth and sixth centuries, the property which they acquired was allodial; but in several parts of Europe property had become almost entirely seudal by the beginning of the tenth century. The former species of property seems to be so much better and more desirable than the latter, that such a change appears surprising, especially when we are informed that allodial property was frequently converted into seudal, by a voluntary voluntary deed of the possessor. The motives which determined them to a choice so repugnant to the ideas of modern times concerning property, have been investigated and explained by M. de Montesquieu with his usual discernment and accuracy, lib. xxxi. c. 8. The most considerable is that of which we have an hint in Lambertus Ardensis, an ancient writer quoted by Du Cange, voce Alodis. In those times of anarchy and disorder which became general in Europe after the death of Charlemagne; when there was scarce any union among the different members of the community; and individuals were exposed, fingle and undefended by government, to rapine and oppression, it became necessary for every man to have a powerful protector, under whose banner he might range himself, and obtain security against enemies, whom he could not fingly oppose. For this reason he relinquished his allodial independance, and subjected himself to the feudal services, that he might find fafety under the patronage of some respectable fuperior. In some parts of Europe, this change from allodial to feudal property became so general, that he who possessed land had no longer any liberty of choice left. He was obliged to recognize some liege Lord, and to hold of him. Thus Beaumanoir informs us, that in the counties of Clermont and Beauvois, if the Lord or Count discovered any lands within his jurisdiction, for which no service was performed, and which paid to him no tax or customs, he might instantly seize it as his own; for, fays he, according to our custom no man can hold allodial property. Couft. ch. 24. p. 123. Upon the fame principle is founded a maxim, which has at length become general in the law of France, Nulle terre fans Seigneur. In other provinces of France allodial property scems to have remained longer ij longer unalienated, and to have been more highly valued. A vast number of charters containing grants, or fales, or exchanges of allodial lands in the province of Languedoe are published Hist. gener. de Langued. par D. D. De Vic & Vaisette, tom. ii. During the ninth, tenth, and greater part of the eleventh century, the property in that province feems to have been entirely allodial; and scarce any mention of feudal tenures occurs in the deeds of that country. The flate of property, during these centuries, seems to have been persectly similar in Catalonia, and the country of Roussillon, as appears from the original charters published in the appendix to Petr. de la Marca's treatife de Marca five limite Hispanico. Allodial property feems to have continued in the Low-Countries, to a period fill later. During the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, this species appears to have been of considerable extent. Mirai opera Diplom. vol. i. 34, 74, 75. 83, 817, 296, 842, 847, 578. Some vestiges of allodial property appear there as late as the fourteenth century. Ibid. 218. The notions of men with respect to property, vary according to the diversity of their understandings, and the caprice of their passions. At the same time that some persons were fond of relinquishing allodial property, in order to hold it by feudal tenure, others feem to have been follicitous to convert their fiefs into allodial property. An instance of this occurs in a charter of Louis le Debonnaire. published by Eckhard, commentarii de rebus Franciæ Orientalis. vol. ii. 885. Another occurs in the year 1299. Reliquiæ MSS. omnis zvi, by Ludwig, vol. i. p. 209, and even one as late as the year 1337. ibid. vol. vii. p. 40. The same thing took place in the Low-Countries. Merzi oper. 1. 52.

In tracing these various revolutions of property, I have hitherto chiefly confined myself to what happened in France, because the ancient monuments of that nation have either been more carefully preserved, or have been more clearly illustrated than those of any people in Europe.

In Italy, the fame revolutions happened in property, and fucceeded each other in the same order. There is some ground, however, for conjecturing that allodial property continued longer in chimation among the Italians, than among the I'rench. It appears that many of the charters granted by the Emperors in the ninth century conveyed an allodial right to land. Murat, antiq. med. ævi. v. i. p. 575, &c. But in the eleventh century, we find some examples of persons who resigned their allodial property, and received it back as a feudal tenure. Ib. p. 610, &c. Muratori observes, that the word seudum, which came to be substituted in place of beneficium, does not occur in any authentick charter previous to the eleventh century. Id. 504. A charter of King Robert of France, A. D. 1008, is the earliest deed in which I have met with the word feudum. Bouquet recueil des historiens de Gaule & de la France, tom. x. p. 593. b. This word occurs indeed in an edict, A. D. 790, published by Brussel, vol. i. p. 77. But the authenticity of that deed has been called in question, and perhaps the frequent use of the word feudum in it, is an additional reason for doing fo. The account which I have given of the nature both of alledial and fendal possessions receives some confirmotion from the etymology of the words themselves. Alode or alledium is compounded of the German particle un and lot,

No.

i. e. land obtained by lot. Wachteri Glossar. Germanicum, voc. Allodium. p. 35. It appears from the authorities produced by him and by Du Cange, voc. fors, that the northern nations divided the lands which they had conquered in this manner. Feodum is compounded of od possession or estate, and feo wages, pay; intimating that it was stipendiary and granted as a recompence for service. Wachterus ibid. voc. feodum. p. 441.

THE progress of the feudal system among the Germans was perfectly similar to that which we have traced in France. But as the Emperors of Germany, especially after the Imperial crown passed from the descendants of Charlemagne to the house of Saxony, were far superior to the contemporary Monarchs of France, in abilities, the Imperial vassals did not aspire so early to independance, nor did they so soon obtain the privilege of possessing their benefices by hereditary right. Conrad II. on the Salic, was the first Emperor, according to the compilers of the Libri Feudorum, who rendered fiefs hereditary. Lib. i. tit. i. Conrad began his reign A. D. 1024. Ludovicus. Pius, under whose reign, grants of hereditary fiefs were frequent in France, succeeded his father, A. D. 814. Not only was this innovation so much later in being introduced among the vasfals. of the German Emperors, but even after Conrad had established it, the law continued favourable to the ancient practice, and unless the charter of the vassal bore expresly that the fief descended to his heirs, it was presumed to be granted only during life. Lib. feud. ibid. Even after the alteration made by Conrad, it was not uncommon in Germany to grant ficfs only for life; a charter of this kind occurs as late as the year 1376. Charta ap. Boehmer. Princip. Jur. feud. p. 361. The transmission of fiefs to collateral and female heirs, took place very flowly among the Germans. There is extant a charter, A. D. 1201. conveying the right of succession to females, but it is granted as an extraordinary mark of favour, and in reward of uncommon fervices. Boehmer. ibid. p. 365. In Germany, as well as in France and Italy, a confiderable part of the lands continued to be allodial long after the feudal mode of tenure was introduced. It appears from the Codex Diplomaticus Monasterii Buch, that a great part of the lands in the marquifate of Misnia was still allodial as late as the thirteenth century. No g1, 36, 37, 46, &c. ap. Scriptores hist. German. cura Schoetgenii & Kreysigii. Altenb. 1755. vol. if. 183, &c. Allodial property feems to have been common in another district of the same province, during the same period. Reliquiæ Diplomaticæ Sanctimonial. Beutiz. No 17, 36, 58. ibid. 374, &c.

charter

NOTE IX. SECT. I. P. 16.

As I shall, in another note, have occasion to represent the condition of that part of the people who dwelt in cities, I will confine myself in this to consider the state of the inhabitants of the country. The persons employed in cultivating the ground during the ages under review may be divided into three classes: I. Servi or slaves. This seems to have been the most numerous class, and consisted either of captives taken in war, or of persons the property in whom was acquired in some one of the various methods enumerated by Du Cange, voc. Servus. v. 6.

p. 447. The wretelled condition of this numerous race of men will appear from feveral circumflances. 1. Their matters had absolute dominion over their persons. They had the power of punishing their flaves capitally, without the intervention of any judge. This dangerous right they possessed not only in the more early periods, when their manners were fierce, but it continued as late as the twelfth century. Joach. Potgiesserus de statu fervorum. Lemgov. 1736. 4to. lib. ii. cap. i. §. 4, 10, 13, 24. Even after this jurisdiction of matters come to be reftrained, the life of a flave was deemed to be of fo little value, that a very flight compensation attened for taking it away. Idem, lib. iii. c. 6. If masters had power over the lives of their slaves, it is evident that almost no bounds would be set to the rigour of the punishments which they might inflict upon them. The Codes of ancient laws preferibed punishments for the crimes of flaves different from those which were inflicted on free men. The latter paid only a fine or compensation, the former were subjected to corporal punishments. The cruelty of these was in many inflances excellive. Slaves, on very flight occasions, might be put to the rack on question. The laws with respect to these points are to be found in Potgiesserus, lib. iii. cap. 7. 2. If the dominion of masters over the lives and persons of their flaves was thus extensive, it was no less so over their actions and property. They were not originally permitted to marry. Male and female flaves were allowed and even encouraged to cohabit together. But this union was not confidered as a marriage, it was called contubernium, not nuptic or matrimonium. Potgiess. lib. ii. c. 2. §. 1. This notion was so much established, that during feveral centuries after the barbarous nations embraced the Christian religion, slaves who lived as husband and wife, were not joined together by any religious ceremony, and did not receive the naptial benediction from a priest. Ibid. §. 10, 11. When this conjunction between flaves came to be confidered as a lawful mairing, they were not permitted to marry without the confent of their master, and such as ventured to do so without obtaining that, were punished with great severity, and sometimes were put to death. Potgiess. ibid. §. 12, &c. Gregor. Turon, luftor, lib. v. c. 3. When the manners of the European nations became more gentle, and their ideas more liberal, flaves who married without their master's consent, were subjected only to a fine. Potgieff. ibid. §. 20. Du Cange Gloff. voc. For imaritagium. 3. All the children of flaves, were in the fame condition with their parents, and became the property of the master. Du Cange Gloss. voc. fervus, vol. 6. 450. Murat, antiq. Ital. vol. i. 766. 4. Slaves were fo entirely the property of their mafters, that they could fell them at pleafure. While domestick slavery continued, the property in a slave was fold in the fame manner with that which a person had in any other moveable. Afterwards flaves became adjeripti glebæ, and were conveyed by fale together with the farm or estate to which they belonged. Potgiefferus has collected the laws and charters which illustrate this well-known circumstance in the condition of flaves. Lib. ii. c. 4. 5. Slaves had a title to nothing but subfishance and cloaths from their master; all the profits of their labour accrued to him. If a mafter, from indulgence, gave his flaves any peculium or fixed allowance for their fubfiftance, they had no right of property in what they faved out of that. All that they accumulated belonged to their master. Potgiess, lib. ii. c. 10. Murat. antiq. Ital. vol. 768. Du Cange, voc. ferous, vol. vi. p. 451. Conformably to the same principle, all the effects of slaves belonged to their master at their death, and they could not dispose of them by testament. Potgiess. lib. ii. c. 11. 6. Slaves were distinguished from free men by a peculiar dress. Among all the barbarous nations, long hair was a mark of dignity and of freedom, slaves were for that reason obliged to shave their heads; and by this distinction, how indifferent soever it may be in its own nature, they were reminded every moment of the inferiority of their condition. Potgiess. lib. iii. c. 4. For the same reason it was enacted in the laws of almost all the nations of Europe, that no slave should be admitted to give evidence against a free man in a court of justice. Du Cange, voc. servus, vol. vi. p. 451. Potgiess. lib. iii. c. 3.

- 2. Villani. They were likewise adscripti glebæ or villæ, from which they derived their name, and were transferable along with it. Du Cange, voc. villanus. But in this they differed from slaves, that they paid a fixed rent to their master for the land which they cultivated, and after paying that, all the fruits of their labour and industry belonged to themselves in property. This distinction is marked by Piere de Fontaine's Conseil. Vie de St. Louis par Joinville, p. 119. edit. de Du Cange. Several cases decided agreeably to this principle are mentioned by Murat. Ibid. p. 773.
- 3. The last class of persons employed in agriculture were free men. These are distinguished by various names among the writers of the middle ages, Arimanni, conditionales, originarii, tributales, &c. These seem to have been persons who possessed some small allodial property of their own, and besides that, cultivated cultivated some farm belonging to their more wealthy neighbours, for which they paid a fixed rent; and bound themfelves likewife to perform feveral small services in prato vel in messe, in aratura vel in vinca, such as ploughing a certain quantity of their landlord's ground, affifting him in harvest and vintage work, &c. The clearest proof of this may be found in Muratori, v. i. p. 712. and in Du Cange under the respective words abovementioned. I have not been able to discover whether these arimanni, &c. were removable at pleasure, or held their farms by leafe for a certain number of years. The former, if we may judge from the genius and maxims of the age, feems to be most probable. These persons, however, were considered as free men in the most honourable sense of the word; they enjoyed all the privileges of that condition, and were even called to serve in war; an honour to which no slave was admitted. Murat. Antiq. vol., i. p. 743. vol. ii. p. 446. This account of the condition of these three different classes of persons, will enable the reader to apprehend the full force of an argument which I shall produce in confirmation of what I have faid in the text concerning the wretched state of the people. Notwithstanding the immense difference between the first of these classes and the third, fuch was the spirit of tyranny which prevailed among the great proprietors of land, and so various their opportunities of oppressing those who were settled on their estates, and of rendering their condition intolerable, that many freemen, in despair, renounced their liberty, and voluntarily furrendered themselves as slaves to their powerful masters. This they did, in order that their masters might become more immediately interested to afford them protection, together with the means of fubfifling themselves and their families. The forms of fuch a furrender, or obnoxidio, as it was then called, are preserved by Marculsus, lib. ii. c. 28; and by by the anonymous reason published by Bignon, together with collector of formula, c. 16. In both, the Marculius for the obmediatio, is the wretched and indigent condition of the person who gives up his liberty. It was fill more common for freemen to furrender their liberty to bishops or abbots, that they might partake of the fecurity which the valials and flaves of churches and monasteries enjoyed, in consequence of the superstitious veneration paid to the faint under whose immediate protection they were supposed to be taken. Du Cange, voc. oblatus, vol. iv. p. 1286. That condition must have been miscrable indeed, which could induce a free man voluntarily to renounce his liberty, and to give up himfelf as a flave to the disposal of another. The number of flaves in all the nations of Europe was prodigious. greater part of the inferior class of people in France were reduced to this flate, at the commencement of the third race of Kings. L'espr. des Loix, liv. xxx. c. 11. The same was the case in England. Brady Pref. to Gen. Hift. Many curious tacks with respect to the ancient state of villains or slaves in England, are published in observations on the statutes, chicky the more ancient 2d edit. p. 244.

NOTE X. SECT. I. p. 19.

charters granted by persons of the highest rank are probaved, from which it appears that they could not subscribe their name. It was usual for persons who could not subscribe their name of the cross in confirmation of a charter. Several of these remain, where Kings and persons or great eminence affix signum crucis manu propria pro ignorations literary. Du Cange, voc. Crux, vol. iii. p. 1191. From this is derived the phrase of signing instead of subscribing a paper. In the ninth century, Hierband

Herbaud Comes Palatii, though supreme judge of the Empire by virtue of his office, could not subscribe his name. Nouveau Traité de Diplomatique par deux Benedictins, 4to. tom. ii. p. 422. So late as the fourteenth century, Du Guesclin, constable of France, the greatest man in the state, and one of the greatest men of his age, could neither read nor write. St. Palaye Memoires sur l'ancienne Chevalerie, t. ii. p. 82. Nor was this ignorance confined to laymen; the greater part of the clergy was not many degrees superior to them in science. Many dignified ecclefiafticks could not subscribe the canons of those councils, in which they fat as members. Nouv. Traité de diplom. tom. ii. p. 424. One of the questions appointed by the canons to be put to persons who were candidates for orders was this, "Whether they could read the gospels and epiftles, and explain the sense of them, at least literally?" Regino Prumiensis ap. Bruck. Hist. Philos. v. iii. p. 631. Alfred the Great complained, that from the Humber to the Thames there was not a priest who understood the liturgy in his mother tongue, or who could translate the easiest piece of Latin; and that from the Thames to the sea, the ecclesiasticks were still more ignorant. Asserus de rebus gestis Alfredi, ap. Camdeni. Anglica, &c. p. 25. The ignorance of the clergy is quaintly described by an author of the " Potius dediti gulæ quam Glossæ; potius collidark ages. gunt libras quam legunt libros; libentius intuentur Martham quam Marcum; malunt legere in Salmone quam in Solomone. Alanus de art. Predicat. ap. Lebeuf. Dissert. tom. ii. p. 21. To the obvious causes of such universal ignorance arising from the state of government and manners, from the seventh to the eleventh century, we may add the feareity of books, and the difficulty of rendering them more common during that period. The Romans wrote their books either on parchment or on paper made of the Egyptian papyrus. The latter being the cheapest, was of course the most commonly used. But after the Saracens conquered Egypt in the feventh century, the communication between that country and the people settled in Italy or in other parts of Europe, was almost entirely broke off, and the papyrus was no longer in use among them. They were obliged, on that account, to write all their books upon parchment, and as the price of that was high, books became extremely rare and of great We may judge of the fearcity of the materials for writing them from one circumstance. There still remain several manuscripts of the eighth, ninth, and following centuries, wrote on parchment, from which some former writing had been crased, in order to substitute a new composition in its place. In this manner, it is probable, that feveral works of the ancients perished. A book of Livy or of Tacitus might be erased, to make room for the legendary tale of a faint, or the superstitious prayers of a missal. Murat. Anti. Ital. v. iii. p. 833. P. de Montfaucon affirms, that the greater part of the manuscripts on parchment which he has feen, those of an ancient date excepted, are written on parchment from which some former treatise had been erased. Mem. de L'Acad. des inscript. tom. ix. p. 325. As the want of materials for writing, is one reason why so many of the works of the ancients have perished, it accounts likewise for the small number of manuscripts of any kind, previous to the eleventh. century, when they began to multiply from a cause which shall be mentioned. Hist. Liter. de France, tom. vi. p. 6. Many circumstances prove the scarcity of books during these ages. Privatepersons seldom possessed any books whatever. Even monasteries of considerable note had only one missal. Murat. Antiq. v. ix. p. 789. Lupus, abbot of Ferrieres, in a letter to the Pope, A. D. 855, befeeches him to lend him a copy of Cicero de Oratore & Quintilian's Institutions, "for," fays he, "although we have parts of those books, there is no compleat copy of them in all France. Murat. Ant. v. iii. p. 835. The price of books became so high, that persons of a moderate fortune could not afford to purchase them. The countess of Anjou paid for a copy of the Homilies of Haimon, bishop of Halberstadt, two hundred sheep, five quarters of wheat, and the same quantity of rye and millet. Histoire Literaire de France par des Religieux Benedictius, tom. vii. p. 3. Even solate as the year 1741, when Louis XI. borrowed the works of Rasis, the Arabian physician, from the faculty of medicine in Paris, he not only deposited as a pledge a considerable quantity of plate, but was obliged to procure a nobleman to join with him as furety in a deed, binding himself under a great forfeiture to restore it. Gabr. Naudè Addit. à l'histoire de Louys XI. par Comines. edit. de Fresnoy, tom. iv. p. 281. Many curious circumstances with respect to the extravagant price of books in the middle ages, are collected by that industrious compiler, to whom I refer such of my readers as deem this finall branch of literary history an object of curiofity. When any person made a present of a book to a church or a monastery, in which were the only libraries during these ages, it was deemed a donative of fuch value, that he offered it on the altar pro remedio anima fue, in order to obtain the forgiveness of his fins. Murat. vol. iii. p. 836. Hist. Liter. de France, t. vi. p. 6. Nouv. Trait. du Diplomat. par deux Benedictins, 4to. tom. i. p. 481. In the eleventh century, the art of making paper in the manner now become universal, was invented; by means of that not only the number of manuscripts increased, but the study of the sciences was wonderfully facilitated. Murat. ib. p. 871. The invention of the art of making paper, and the invention of the art of printing, are two confiderable events in literary history.

Hh 2

It is remarkable that the former preceded the first dawning of letters and improvement in knowledge towards the close of the eleventh century; the latter ushered in the light which spread over Europe at the zera of the Reformation.

PNOTE XI. SECT. I. p. 19.

ALL the religious maxims and practices of the dark ages are a proof of this. I shall produce one remarkable testimony in confirmation of it, from an author canonized by the church of Rome, St. Eloy or Egidius, bishop of Noyon, in the seventh cen-"He is a good Christian who comes frequently to church; who presents the oblation which is offered to God upon the altar; who doth not taste of the fruits of his own industry until he has confecrated a part of them to God; who, when the holy festivals shall approach, lives chastely even with his own wife during feveral days, that with a fafe conscience he may draw near to the altar of God; and who, in the last place, can repeat the Creed and the Lord's Prayer. Redeem then your fouls from destruction while you have the means in your power; offer prefents and tythes to churchmen; come more frequently to church; humbly implore the patronage of the faints; for if you observe these things, you may come with security in the day to the tribunal of the eternal Judge, and fay, "Give to us, O Lord, for we have given unto thee." Dacherii Specilegium Veter. Script. v. ii. p. 94. The learned and judicious translator of Dr. Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, from one of whose additional notes I have borrowed this puffage, fubjoins a very proper reflection; "We fee here a large and ample description of a good Christian, in which there is not the least mention of the love of God, refignation to his will, obedience to his laws, or of justice, benevolence, and charity towards men." Mosh. Eccles. Hist. v. i. p. 324.

PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

NOTE XII. SECT. I. p. 20.

IT is no inconsiderable misfortune to the church of Rome, whose doctrine of infallibility renders all such institutions and ceremonies as have been once univerfally received, immutable and everlasting, that the must continue to observe in enlightened times, those rites which were introduced during the ages of darkness and credulity. What delighted and edified the latter, must disgust and shock the former. Many of these rites appear manifeltly to have been introduced by a superstition of the lowest and most illiberal species. Many of them were borrowed, with little variation, from the religious ceremonies established among the ancient Heathens. Some were fo ridiculous, that if every age did not furnish inflances of the fascinating influence of superstition, as well as of the whimfical forms which it assumes, it must appear incredible that they should ever be received or tolerated. In several churches of France, they celebrated a festival in commemoration of the Virgin Mary's flight into Egypt. It was called the feast of the Ass. A young girl richly dressed, with a child in her arms, was let upon an als superbly caparifoned. The ass was led to the altar in folenn procession, High Mass was faid with great pomp. The ass was taught to kneel at proper places; a hymn no less childish than impious was sung in his praise: And when the ceremony was ended, the price, inflead of the usual words with which he difmissed the weople, brayed three times like an afs; and the people, inftead of their usual response, We bless the Lord, brayed three times in the same manner. Du Cange, voc. Festum. v. iii. p. 424. This ridiculous ceremony was not, like the festival of sools, and some other pageants of those ages, a mere farcical entertainment exhibited in a church, and mingled, as was then the custom, with an imitation of some religious rites; it was an act of devotion, performed by the ministers of religion, and by the authority of the church. However, as this practice did not prevail universally in the Catholick church, its absurdicty contributed at last to abolish it.

7 .

NOTE XIII. SECT. I. p. 25.

As there is no event in the history of mankind more singular than that of the Crusades, every circumstance that tends to explain or to give any rational account of this extraordinary frenzy of the human mind is interesting. I have afferted in the text, that the minds of men were prepared gradually for the amazing effort which they made in consequence of the exhortations of Peter the hermit, by feveral occurrences previous to his time. A more particular detail of this curious and obscure part of history, may perhaps appear to some of my readers to be of importance. That the end of the world was expected about the close of the tenth and beginning of the eleventh century; and that this occasioned a general alasm, is evident from the authors to whom I refer in the text. . belief was fo universal and fo firong, that it mingled itself with their civil transactions. Many charters in the latter part of the tenth century begin in this manner: "Apropinquante mundi termino," &c. As the end of the world is now at hand, and by various calamities and judgments the figns of its approach are now manifest. Hist. de Langued par. D. D. de Vic Vaisette, tom. ii. Preuves, p. 86, 89, 90, 117, 158, &c. One effect of this was, that a great number of pilgrims reforted to Jerusalem, with a resolution to die there, or to wait the coming of the Lord; Kings, Earls, Marquisses, Bishops, and even a great number of women, belides persons of inferior rank flocked to the Holy Land Glaber. Rodulph. His. chez Bouquet Recueil, tom. x. p. 50, 52. Another historian mentions a vast cavalcade of pilgrims who accompanied the count of Angouleme to Jerusalem in the year 1026. Chronic. Ademari, ibid. p. 162. These pilgrims filled Europe with lamentable accounts of the state of Christians in the Holy Land. Willerm. Tyr. Hist. ap. Gest. Dei per Franc. vol. ii. p. 636. Guibert. Abbat. Hist. ibid. vol. i. p. 476. Besides this, it was usual for many of the Christian inhabitants of Jerusalem, as well as of other cities in the East, to travel as mendicants through Europe; and by describing the wretched condition of the professors of the Christian faith under the dominion of Infidels, to extort charity, and to excite zealous perfons to make some attempt in order to deliver them from oppres-Baldrici. Archiepiscopi Histor. ap. Gesta Dei, &c. vol. i. p. 86. In the year 986, Gerbert, archbishop of Ravenna, afterwards Pope Silvester II. addressed a letter to all Christians in the name of the church of Jerusalem. It is eloquent and pathetic, and contains a formal exhortation to take arms against the Pagan oppressors; in order to rescue the holy city from their yoke. Gerberti-Epistolæ ap. Bouquet, Recueil, tom. x. p. 426. In consequence of this spirited call, some subjects of the republick of Pisa equipped a fleet, and invaded the territories of the Mahometans in Syria. Murat. Script. Rer. Italic. vol. iii. p. 400. The alarm was taken in the East, and an opinion prevailed, A. D. 1010, that all the forces forces of Christendom were to unite, in order to drive the Mahometans out of Palestine. Chron. Ademari ap. Bouquet, tom. x. p. 152. It is evident from all these particulars, that the ideas which led the Crusaders to undertake their wild enterprize were gradually formed; so that the universal concourse to the standard of the cross when creeted by Urban II. will appear less surprifing.

240

If the various circumstances which I have enumerated in this note, as well as in the history, are sufficient to account for the ardour with which fuch vast numbers engaged in such a dangerous undertaking, the extensive privileges and immunities granted to those who assumed the cross, serve to account for the long continuance of this spirit in Europe. 1. They were exempted from profecutions on account of debt during the time of their being engaged in this holy fervice. Du Cange, voc. Crucis privilegium, v. ii. p. 1194.---2. They were exempted from paying interest for the money which they had borrowed. Ibid.— 3. They were exempted either entirely, or at least during a certain time, from the payment of taxes. Ibid. Ordonances des Rois de France, tom. i. p. 33.---4. They might alienate their lands without the confent of the fuperior lord of whom they held. Ib. 5. Their persons and esfects were taken under the protection of St. Peter, and the anathemas of the church were denounced against all who should molest them, or carry on any quarrel or hostility against them, during their absence, on account of the holy war. Du Cange, Ib. Guibertus Abbas ap. Bongarf. i. p. 4801482 .---6. They enjoyed all the privileges of Ecclefiaflicks, and were not bound to plead in any civil court, but were declared subject to the spiritual jurisdiction alone. Du Cange, Ib. Ordon. des Rois, tom. i.

PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS

p. 34, 174.—7. They obtained a plenary remission of all their fins, and the gates of heaven were let open to them, without requiring any proof of their penitence, but their engaging in this expedition, and thus gratifying their favourite passion, the love of war. Guibert Abbas, p. 480. When we behold the civil and ecclefiaftical powers vying with each other, and straining their invention in order to devise expedients for encouraging and adding firength to the spirit of superstition, can we be furprized that it should become so general as to render it infamous, and a mark of cowardice to decline engaging in the holy war? Williem Tyrienfis ap. Bongarf, vol. ii. p. 641. The histories of the Crusades written by modern authors, who are apt to substitute the ideas and maxims of their own age in the place of those which influenced the perfons whose actions they attempt to relate, convey a very imperfect notion of the spirit at that time predominant in Europe. The original historians, who were animated themselves with the same passions which possessed their contemporaries, exhibit to us a more striking picture of the times and manners which they describe. The enthusiastic rapture with which they account for the effects of the Pope's discourse in the council of Clermont; the exultation with which they mention the numbers who devoted themselves to this holy warfare; the considence with which they rely on the divine protection; the extafy of joy with which they describe their taking possession of the holy city, will enable us to conceive in some degree the extravagance of that zeal which agitated the minds of men with fuch violence, and will fuggest as many singular reflections to a philosopher, as any occurrence in the history of mankind. ----It is unnecessary to select the particular passages in the several hiftorians which confirm this observation. But lest these authors Vol. l. Ιi may be suspected of adorning their narrative with any exaggerated description, I shall appeal to one of the leaders who conducted the enterprize. There is extant a letter from Stephen, the earl of Chartres and Blois, to Adela his wife, in which he gives her an account of the progress of the Crusaders. He describes the Crusaders as the chosen army of Christ, as the servants and soldiers of God, as men who marched under the immediate protection of the Almighty, being conducted by his hand to victory and conquest. He speaks of the Turks as accursed, sacrilegious, and devoted by heaven to destruction; and when he mentions the soldiers in the Christian army who had died, or were killed, he is consident that their souls were admitted directly into the joys of Paradise. Dacherii Specilegium, vol. iv. p. 257.

PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE expence of conducting numerous bodies of men from Europe to Asia, must have been excessive, and the dissiculty of raising the necessary sums must have been proportionally great, during ages when the publick revenues in every nation of Europe were extremely small. Some account is preserved of the expedients employed by Humbert II. Dauphin of Vienne, in order to levy the money requisite towards equipping him for the Crusade, A. D. 1346. These I shall mention, as they tend to shew the considerable influence which the Crusades had, both. on the state of property and of civil government. posed to fale part of his domains; and as the price was destined for such a facred service, he obtained the consent of the French King, of whom these lands were held, ratifying the alienation. Hist. de Dauphinè tom. i. p. 332. 335.—2. He iffued a proclamation, in which he promifed to grant new privileges to the nobles, nobles, as well as new immunities to the cities and towns, in his territories, in confideration of certain fums which they were instantly to pay on that account. Ibid. tom. ii. p. 512. Many of the charters of community, which I shall mention in another note, were obtained in this manner.—3. He exacted a contribution towards defraying the charges of the expedition from all his subjects, whether ecclesiasticks or laymen, who did not accompany him in person to the East. Ibid: tom. i. p. 335.--4. He appropriated a confiderable part of his usual revenues for the support of the troops to be employed in this service; ibid. tom. ii. p. 518 .-- 5. He exacted confiderable fums not only of the kewssettled in his dominions, but also of the Lombards and other bankers who had fixed their residence there. Ibid, tom. i. p. 338. tom. ii. 528. Notwithstanding the variety of these resources, the Dauphin was involved in such expence by this expedition, that on his return he was obliged to make new demands on his fubjects, and to pillage the Jews by fresh exactions. Ibid. tom. i. p. 344, 347. When the count de Foix engaged in the first Crufade, he raifed the money necessary for defraying the expences of that expedition, by alienating part of his territories. de Langued, par D. D. de Vie & Vaisette, tom. ii. p. 287. like manner Baldwin, count of Hainaut, mortgaged or fold part of his dominions to the bishop of Liege. A. D. 1096. Du Mont Corps Diplomatique, tom. i. p. 59. At a later period, Baldwin Count of Namur fold part of his effate to a monastery, when he intended to assume the cross. A. D. 1239. Mirzi oper. i. 313.

NOTE XIV. SECT. I. p. 29.

THE usual method of forming an opinion concerning the comparative state of manners in two different nations, is by attending to the facts which historians relate concerning each of them. Various passages might be selected from the Byzantin historians, describing the splendor and magnificence of the Greek Empire. P. de Montfaucon has produced from the writings of St. Chrysostom a very full account of the elegance and luxury of the Greeks in his age. That father in his fermons enters into kith details concerning the manners and customs of his contemporaries, as appear strange in discourses from the pulpit. P. de Montfaucon has collected these descriptions, and ranged them under different heads. The court of the more early Greek Emperors scems to have resembled those of Eastern monarchs, both in magnificence and in corruption of manners. The Emperors in the eleventh century, though inferior in power, did not yield to them in oftentation and splendor. Memoires de l'Acad. des Inscript. tom. xx. p. 197.—But we may decide concerning the comparative state of manners in the Eastern Empire, and among the nations in the west of Europe by another method, which, if not more certain, is at least more striking. As Constantinople was the place of rendezvous for all the armies of the crusaders, this brought together the people, of the east and west as to one great interview. There are extant several contemporary authors, both among the Greeks and Latins, who were witnesses of this fingular congress of people formerly strangers, in a great measure, to each other. They describe with simplicity and candour, the impression which that new spectacle made upon their own minds. This may be confidered as the most lively and just picture of the real character and manners of each people. When the Greeks speak of the Franks, they describe them as barbarians, fierce, illiterate, impetuous and favage. They assume a tone of superiority, as a more polified people, acquainted with the arts both of government and of elegance, of which the other were ignorant. It is thus Anna Comnena describes the manners of the Latins. Alexias, p. 224. 231. 237. ap. Byz. Script. vol. xi. She always treats them with contempt as a rude people, the very mention of whose names was sufficient to contaminate the beauty and elegance of history, p. 229. Nicetas Choniatas inveighs against them with still more violence, and gives an account of their ferocity and devastations, in terms not unlike those which preceding historians had employed in describing the incursions of the Goths and Vandals. Nicet. Chon. ap. Byz. Script. vol. iii. p. 302, &. But, on the other hand, the Latin historians were struck with astonishment at the magnificence, wealth, and elegance which they discovered in the Eastern Empire. what a vast city is Constantinople (exclaims Fulcherius Carnotensis, when he first beheld it) and how beautiful! How many monasteries are there in it, and how many palaces built with wonderful art! How many manufactures are there in the city amazing to behold! It would be aftonishing to relate how it abounds with all good things, with gold, filver, and stuffs of various kinds; for every hour ships arrive in its port laden with all things necessary for the use of man. Fulcher. ap. Bongars. vol. i. p. 386. Willermus Arehbishop of Tyre, the most intelligent historian of the crusades, takes frequent occasion to describe the elegance and splendour of the court of Constantinople, and adds, that what they observed there exceeded any idea which they could have formed of it, nostrarum enim rerum modum & dignitatem excedunt, Willerm. Tyr. ap. Bong. vol. it. p. 657. 664. Guntherus, a French monk who wrote a history of the conquest of Constantinople by the crusaders in the thirteenth century, speaks of the magnificence of that eligin the fame fame tone of admiration, "Structuram autem Ædificiorum in corpore civitatis, in ecclesiis videlicet, & turribus, & in domibus magnatorum, vix ullus vel describere potest, vel credere describenti, nist qui ea oculata fide cognoverit." Hist. Constantinop. ap. Canissi Lectiones Antiquas. fol. Antw. 1725. vol. iv. p. 14. Geoffrey de Villehardouin, a nobleman of high rank, and accustomed to all the magnificence then known in the west, describes, in similar terms, the astonishment and admiration of fuch of his fellow foldiers who beheld Constantinople for the first time: " They could not have believed, fays he, that there was a city so beautiful and rich in the whole world. When they viewed its high walls, its lofty towers, its rich palaces, its fuperb churches, all appeared fo great that they could have formed no conception of this fovereign city, unless they had feen it with their own eyes." Histoire de la Conquete de Constant. p. 40. From these undisguised representations of their own feelings, it is evident, that to the Greeks, the Latins appeared to be a race of rude, unpolished barbarians; whereas the latter, how much foever they might contemn the unwarlike character of the former, could not help regarding them as far superior to themselves in elegance and arts.—That the state of government and manners was much more improved in Italy than in the other countries of Europe is evident not only from the facts recorded in history, but it appears that the more intelligent leaders of the crusaders were struck with the difference. Jacobus de Vitriaco, a French historian of the holy war, makes an elaborate panegyrick on the character and manners of the Italians. He views them as a more polished people, and particularly celebrates them for their love of liberty, and civil wisdom; in confiliis circumspectis, in re sua publica procuranda diligentes & studiosi; sibi in posterum providentes; aliis subjici renuentes; ante trattia libertatem sibi desendentes; sub uno quem eligunt contrates, communitate sue jura & instituta dictantes, & similità chiervantes. Histor. Hierosol. ap. Gesta Dei per France. vol. 12. p. 1085.

1 i 2 (attending

NOTE XV. SECT. I. P. 33

THE different steps taken by the cities of Italy in order to extend their power and dominion are remarkable. As foon as their liberties were effablished, and they began to feel their own importance, they endeavoured to render themselves masters of the territory round their walls. Under the Romans, when cities enjoyed municipal privileges and jurisdiction, the circumjacent lands belonged to each town, and were the property of the community. But as it was not the genius of the feudal policy to encourage cities, or to show any regard for their possessions and immunities, these lands had been seized, and shared among the conquerors. The barons to whom they were granted, erected their castles almost at the gates of the city, and exercifed their jurifdiction there. Under pretence of recovering their ancient property, many of the cities in Italy attacked these troublefome neighbours, and dispossessing them, annexed their territories to the communities, and made thereby a considerable addition to their power. Several inflances of this occur in the eleventh, and beginning of the tweltth centuries. Murat. antiq. fial. vol. iv. p. Their ambition increasing together with their power, they afterwards attacked feveral barons fituated at a greater diftance from them, and obliged these to engage that they should become members of their community; that they should take the outh of fidelity to their magistrates; that they should subject their lands to all burdens and taxes imposed by common confent; that they should defend the community against all its enemies; and that they should reside within the city during a certain specified time in each year. Murat. ibid. 163. This sub-· jection of the nobility to the municipal government established in cities, become amost universal, and was often extremely grievous to persons accustomed to consider themselves as independant. Otto Frilingenfis thus describes the state of Italy under Frederick I. "The cities for much affect liberty, and are so sollicitous to avoid the insolence of power, that almost all of them have thrown off every other authority, and are governed by their own magistrates. Infomuch that all that country is now filled with free cities, each of which have compelled their bishops to reside within their walls, and there is scarce any nobleman, how great soever his power may be, who is not subject to the laws and government of some city. Gestis Frider. I. Imp. lib. ii. c. 13. p. 453. In another place he observes of the Marquis of Montserrat that he was almost the only Italian baron, who had preferved his independance, and had not become subject to the laws of any city. See also Muratori Antichita Estensi, vol. i. p. 411, 412. That state into which some of the nobles were compelled to enter, others embraced from choice. They observed that high degree of security as well as of credit and estimation which the growing wealth and dominion of the great communities procured to all the members of them. They were defirous to partake of these, and to put themselves under such powerful protection. With this view they voluntarily became citizens of the towns to which their lands were most contiguous, and abandoning their ancient ancient castles, took up their residence in the cities at least ducing part of the year. Several deeds are still extant, by which fome of the most illustrious families in Italy are allogiated citizens of different cities. Murat. ib. p. 165, &c. A charter by which Atto de Macerata is admitted as a citizen of Olimo, A. D. 1198, in the Marcha di Ancona is kill extant. In this he stipulates, that he will acknowledge himself to be a burgels of that community; that he will to the utmost of his power promote its honour and welfare; that he will obey its magistrates; that he will enter into no league with its enemies; that he will relide in the town during two months in every year, or for a longer time if required by the magistrates. The community on the other hand take him, his family and friends under their protection, and engage to defend him against every enemy. T. Ant. Zacharias Anecdota medii avi. Aug. Taurm. 1755. fol. p. 66. This privilege was deemed fo important, that not only laymen, but ecclesiasticks of the highest rank, condescended to be adopted as members of the great communities, in hopes of enjoying the fafety and dignity which that conferred. Murat. ib. 179. Before the institution of communities, persons of noble birth had no other residence but their castles. They kept their petty courts there; and the cities were deferted, having hardly any inhabitants but flaves or persons of low condition. But in consequence of the practice which I have mentioned, cities not only became more populous, but were filled with inhabitants of better rank, and a custom which still subsists in Italy was then introduced, that all families of distinction reside more constantly in the great towns. than is usual in other parts of Europe. As cities acquired new confideration and dignity by the accession of such citizens, they VOL. L K kbecame became more folicitous to preserve their liberty and independance. The Emperors, as fovereigns, had anciently a palace in almost every great city of Italy; when they visited that country they were accustomed to reside in these, and the troops which accompanied them were quartered in the houses of the citizens. This the citizens confidered both as ignominious and dangerous. They could not help confidering it as receiving a master and an enemy within their walls. They laboured therefore to get free of this subjection. Some cities prevailed on the Emperors to engage that they should never enter their gates, but take up their residence without the walls: Chart. Hen. IV. Murat. ib. p. 24. Others obtained the Imperial licence to pull down the palace situated within their liberties, on condition that they built another in the suburbs for the reception of the Amperor. Chart. Hen. IV. Murat. ib. p. 25. These various encroachments of the Italian cities alarmed the Emperors, and put them on schemes for re-cstablishing the Imperial jurisdiction over them on its ancient footing. Frederick Barbarossa engaged in this enterprize with great ardour. The free cities of Italy joined. together in a general league, and stood on their defence; and after a long contest, carried on with alternate fuccess, a solema treaty of peace was concluded at Constance, A. D. 1183. by which all the privileges and immunities granted by former Emperors to the principal cities in Italy were confirmed and ratified, Murat. differt. XLVIII. This treaty of Constance was considered as such an important article in the jurisprudence of the middle ages, that it is usually published together with the Libri Feudorum at the end of the Corpus Juris Civilis. fecured privileges of great importance to the confederate cities, and though it reserved a considerable degree of authority and jurisdiction 1

th.

jurisdiction to the Empire, yet the cities persevered with such vigour in their efforts in order to extend their immunities, and the conjunctures in which they made them were so favorable, that, before the conclusion of the thirteenth century, the of the great cities in Italy had shaken off all marks of subjection to the Empire, and were become independant sovereign republicks. It is not requisite that I should trace the variable by which they advanced to this high degree of power so fatal to the Empire, and so beneficial to the cause of liberty in Italy. Muratori with his usual industry has collected many original papers which illustrate this curious and little known part of history. Murat. Antiq. Ital. Differt. L. See also Jo. Bapt. Villanovæ hist. Laudis Pompeii sive Lodi in Græv. Thes. Antiquit. Ital. vol. iii. p. 888.

NOTE XVI. SECT. I. p. 34.

Long before the inflitution of communities in France, charters of immunity or Franchise were granted to some towns and villages by the Lords on whom they depended. But these are very different from such as became common in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. They did not erect these towns into corporations; they did not establish a municipal government; they did not grant them the privilege of bearing arms. They contained nothing more than a manumission of the inhabitants from the yoke of servitude; an exemption from certain services which were oppressive and ignominious; and the establishment of a fixed tax or rent which they were to pay to their Lord in place of impositions which he could formerly lay upon them at pleasure. Two charters of this kind to two villages in the county of Rousillan, one A. D. 974. the other A. D. 1025, are still extant. Petr. de Marca Marca, sive limes Hispanicus. app. p. 909. 1038. Such concessions, it is probable, were not unknown in other parts of Europe, and may be confidered as a ften towards the more extensive privileges conferred by Louis the Gross on the towns within his domains. The communities in France never afpiled to the same independance with those in They recorded new privileges and immunities, but the right of fovereignty remained entire to the King or baron within whose territories the respective cities were situated, and from whom they received the charter of their freedom. great number of these charters granted both by the Kings of France, and by their great vastals are published by M. D'Achery in his Specilegium, and many are found in the collection of the Ordonances des Rois de France. These convey a very striking representation of the wretched condition of cities previous to the inflitution of communities, when they were subject to the judges appointed by the superior Lords of whom they held, and had scarce any other law but their will. Each concession in these charters must be considered as a grant of some new privilege which the people did not formerly enjoy, and each regulation as a method of redreffing fome grievance under which they formerly laboured. The charters of communities contain likewise the first expedients employed for the introduction of equal laws, and regular government. On both these accounts they merit particular attention, and therefore instead of referring my readers to the many bulky volumes in which they are scattered, I shall give them a view of some of the most important articles in these charters ranged under two general heads. I. Such as respect personal safety. II. Such as respect the security of property.

Kk2

I. DURING

I. DURING that state of turbulence and disorder which the corruption of the feudal government introduced into Europe, personal safety was the chief object of every individual and as the great military barons alone were able to pice fufficient protection to their vaffals, this was one great fource of their power and authority. But, by the inflitution of communities, effectual provision was made for the fafety of individuals independant of the nobles. For, 1. the fundamental article in every charter was, that all the members of it bound themselves by oath to assist, defend, and stand by each other against all aggressors, and that they should not suffer any person to injure, distress, or molest, any of their fellow citizens. D'Achef. Spicel. x. 642. xi. 341, &c. -2. Whoever refided in any town which was made free, was obliged under a fevere penalty to accerie to the community, and to take part in the mutual defence of its members. D'Acher. Spic. xi. 344.--3. The communities had the privilege of carrying arms; of making war on their private enemies; and of executing by military force any sentence which their magistrates pronounced. D'Ach. Spicel, x. 643, 644. xi. 343.--4. The practice of making fatisfaction by a pecuniary compensation for murder, assault, or other acts of violence, most inconsistent with the order of society, and the fafety of individuals, was abolished; and such as committed these crimes were punished capitally, or with rigour adequate to their guilt. D'Ach. xi. 362. Miræi opera Diplomatica, i. 29 '.-- 5. No member of a community was bound to justify or defend himself by battle, or combat, but if he was charged with any crime, he could be convicted only by the evidence of witnesses, and the regular course of legal proceedings. Miræus, l ibid. D'Ach. xi. 375, 349. Ordon. tom. iii. 265.—6. If any man suspected himself to be in danger from the malice or enmity of another, upon his making oath to that effect before a magistrate, the person suspected was bound under a severe penalty to give security for his peaceable behaviour. D'Ach. vi. 346. This is the same species of security which is still known in Scotland and the name of Lawburrows. In France it was first introducted almong the inhabitants of communities, and having been found to contribute considerably towards personal safety, it was extended to all the other members of the society. Establissemens de St. Louis, liv. i. cap. 28. ap. Du Cange vie de St. Louis, p. 15.

II. THE provisions in the charters of communicies concerning the fecurity of property are not less considerable that those respecting personal safety. By the ancient law of France no perfon could be arrested or confined in prison on account of any private debt. Ordon. des Rois de France, tom. i. p. 72, 80. If any person was arrested upon any pretext, but his having been guilty of a capital crime, it was lawful to rescue him out of the hands of the officers who had feized him. Ordon. iii. p. 17. Freedom from arrest on account of debt seems likewise to have been enjoyed in other countries. Gudenus Sylloge Diplom. 473. In fociety, while it remained in its sudest and most simple form, debt feems to have been considered as an obligation merely personal. Men had made some progress towards refinement before creditors acquired a right of feizing the troperty of their debtors in order to recover payment. The expedients for this purpose were all introduced originally in communities, and we can trace the gradual progress of them. 1. The simplest and most obvious species of security was, that the person who fold any commodity should received from him who bought it, which he restored used payment. Of this custom there are vestiges in the second of community. D'Ach. ix. 185. xi. 377 was given, and the debtor became refraction in the creditor was allowed to feme his effects and by his private authority; the citizens at a second ted by the royal mandate, "ut ubicumque a succumque modo poterunt, tantum capiant, unde peccatism sibi debitara integrè & plenariè habeant, & inde sibi invicem adjutores existant." Ordon. &c. tom. i. p. 6. This rude practice, suitable only to the violence of a state of nature, was tolerated longer than one can conceive to be possible in any society, where laws and order were at all known. The ordonance authorizing it was issued, A. D. 1134. and that which corrects the law, and prohibits creditors from feizing the effects of their debtors, unless by a warrant from a magistrate, and under his inspection, was not published until the year 1351. Orden. tom. ii. 438. It is probable, however, that men were taught, by obferving the disorders which the former mode of proceeding occasioned, to correct it in practice long before a remedy was provided by a law to that effect. Every discerning reader will ' apply this observation to many other customs and practices which I have mentioned. New customs are not always to be ascribed to the laws which authorize them. These traduces only give a legal function to fuch things as the experience of manking has previously found to be proper and beneficial.—3. As four as the interpolition of the magistrate became requilite, regular provision was made for attaching or distraining the moveable effects of a debtor; and if his moveables were not sufficient to dicharge discharge the debt, his immoveable property, or estate in land was liable to the same distress, and was fold for the benefit of his coeditor. D'Ach. ix. p. 184, 185. xi. p. 348. 380. As this regulation afforded the most compleat fecurity to the craditor, it was confidered as so severe, that humanity pointed out feveral limitations in the execution of it. Creditors were prohibited from feizing the wearing apparel of their debtors, their beds, the door of their house, their instruments of husbandry, &c. D'Ach. ix. 184. xi. 377. Upon the same principles, when the power of distraining effects became more general, the horse and arms of a gentleman could not be seized, D'Ach. ix. 185. As hunting was the favourite amusement of martial nobles, the Emperor Lodovicus Pius prohibited the feizing of a hawk on account of any composition or debt. Capitul. lib. iv. § 21. But if the debtor had no other moveables, even these privileged articles might be seized .--- 4. In order to render the fecurity of property compleat within a community, every person who was admitted a member of it, was obliged to buy or build a house, or to purchase lands, within its precincts, or at least to bring into the town a confiderable portion of his moveables per que justitiari possit, si quid forte in eum querele evenerit. D'Ach. xi. 326. Ordon. i. 367. Libertates S. Georgii de Esperanchia. Hist. de Dauphine, tom. i. p. 26 .--g. That fecurity might be as perfect as possible; in some towns the members of the community feem to have been bound for each other. D'Ach. x. 644 .-- 6. All questions with respect to property were tried within the community, by magistrates and judges, which the citizens elected or appointed. Their decifions were more equal and fixed than the fentences which depended on the capricious and arbitrary will of a baron who thought thought himself superior to all laws 34 1 De pallin. Ordon. iii. 2041-77 No monber dity could be buildened by any arbitrary the wood granted the charter of community center on the time of all demands. berrates de Colors. Mill de Darphiras bott St. Georgii ee Liperanchiz, ibid. 10: 26. bere of a community be diffred by an unequal fum to be levied on the company, the in the chargers of forme seminativities concerning the method of determining the quote of any size to be levied on each inhabitant. D'Ach. at 330 300 St. Lower published an authorance concerning this matter, which executed to all the communicate Ordon. 1 1. 186. These togulations are extremely favourable to liberty, as they well the power of proportioning the texts in a contain protein of chizens cholen out of each partle were bound by folema oath to decide according to patties will hat the more perfect recently of property was one great direct of their who inflinated communities we learn and only from the nature of the thing hat from the express words of feveral charters, of which that only maken the granted by Alienore Queen of England and Dunkoff of Same community of Poitiers, "ar lun proprie mellus distributo poffint, & magis integre cultodire." Du Cange vice Commence & 1 863. Such are fome of the capital regulations established in the ties during the twelch and thereenth centuries. Their may be confidered as the first radion the of law and order, and convention greatly to introduce regular government among all the mathematical of fociety. As from as communities were inflituted a formal ments of liberty began to appear. When Him to VOL. I. T. 1

the

255

PROOFS AND LILED TERM

Beaujen, upon granting a charter of community to the town of Belleville, exacted of the inhabitants an oath of fidelity to himfelf and successors, they slipulated, on their part, that he should fires to maintain their franchises and liberties; and for their greater lecentry, they obliged him to bring twenty gentlemen to take the fathe path, and to be bound together with him. D'Ach. ix 183. In the name manner the lord of Moirens in Dauphine produced a certain number of persons as his surcties for the obfervation of the articles contained in the charter of community to that town. These were bound to surrender themselves prifoners to the inhabitants of Moirens, if their liege lord should violate any of their franchises, and they promised to remain in custody until he should grant them redress. Hist. de Dauphine, tom. i. p. 17. If the mayor or chief magistrate of a town did any injury to a citizen, he was obliged to give fecurity for his appearance in judgment in the same manner as a private person; and if cast, was liable to the same penalty. D'Ach. ix. 183. These are ideas of equality uncommon in the feudal times. Communities were so favourable to freedom, that they were distinguished by the name of Libertates. Du Cange, v. ii. p. 863. They were at first extremely odious to the nobles, who foresaw what a check they must prove to their power and domination. Guibert Abbot of Nogent calls them execrable inventions, by which, contrary to law and justice, slaves withdrew themselves from that obedience which they owed to their masters. Du Cange, ib. 862. The zeal with which some of the nobles and powerful ecclesiasticks opposed the establishment of communities, and endeavoured to circumferibe their privileges, was extraordinary. A striking instance of this occurs in the contests between the archbishop of Reims, and the inhabitants of that community, during a confiderable time, to abridge the rights and invitions of the community; and the great object of the citizens, each their jurisdiction. Histoire civile & politiques of Reims par M. Anquetil, tom. i. p. 287, orc.

THE observations which I have made concerning the late of cities, and the condition of their inhabitants. Are confirmed by innumerable passages in the historians and laws of the middle It is not improbable, however, that some cities of the first order were in a better state, and enjoyed a superior degree of liberty. Under the Roman government, the municipal government established in cities was extremely favourable to liberty. The jurisdiction of the fenate in each corporation, and the privileges of the citizens, were both extensive. There is reason to believe, that some of the greater cities which escaped the destructive rage of the barbarous nations, still retained their ancient form of government, at least in a great measure. They were governed by a council of citizens, and by magistrates whom they themselves elected. Very strong prefumptions in favour of this opinion are produced by M. l'Abbé De Bos. Hift. Crit. de la Mon. Franc. tom. i. p. 18; &cc. tom. ii. p. 524. edit. 1742. It appears from some of the charters of communities to cities, granted in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. that they only confirm the privileges possessed by the infiabitants previous to the establishment of the community. D'Acher. Specileg. vol. xi. p. 345. Other cities claimed their privileges as having possessed them without interruption from the times of the Romans. Hift. Crit. de la Mon. Franc. tom. ii. p. 333. But the number of cities which enjoyed such immunities was so finall. Ll2 imall, as in no degree to diminish the force of my conclusions in the text.

MOTEL XVII. SECT. L. p. 34

while account of the establishment -- ---effects in communities in Italy and France, it will be necessary to enquire with force attention into the progress of citics and of municipal government in Germany. The ancient Germans had no cities. Even in their hamlets or villages they did not build their houses contiguous to each other. Tac. de Mor. Germ. cap. 16. They confidered it as a badge of servitude to be obliged to dwell in a city furrounded with walls. When one of their tribes had shaken off the Roman yoke, their countrymen required of them, as an evidence of their having recovered liberty, to demolish the walls of a town which the Romans had built in their country. Even the fiercest animals, faid they, lose their spirit and courage when they are confined. Tac. Histor. lib. iv. c. 64. The Romans built several cities of note on the banks of the Rhine. But in all the vast countries from that river to the coasts of the Baltick, there was hardly one ciry previous to the ninth century of the Christian æra. Conringius Exercitatio de Urbibus Germaniæ Oper. vol. i. §. 25, 27, 31, Heinercius differs from Conringius with respect to this. But even after allowing to his arguments and authorities their utmost force, they prove only that there were a few places in those extensive regions on which some historians have bestowed the name of towns. Elem. Jur. German. lib. i. §. 102. Under Charlemagne, and the Emperors of his family, as the political flate of Germany began to improve, several cities were founded, and men became accustomed to affociate and to live mether in one place. Charlemagne founded two archbishopric and make bishopricks in the most considerable towns of General. Gpera Diplomatica, vol. i. p. 16. His filecellors member the number of these; and as the bishops fixed their relies and these cities, and performed religious functions there that in duced many people to fettle in them. But Henry, firnamed the Fowler, who began his research. D. 920, must be considered as the great founder of the cities in Germany. The Empire was at that time infelled by the incursions of the Hungarians and other barbarous people. In order to oppole them, Henry encouraged his subjects to settle in cities which he furrounded with walls and towers. He enjoined or persuaded a certain proportion of the nobility to fix their residence in the towns, and thus rendered the condition of citizens more honourable than it had been formerly. Wittikindus Annal. lib. i. ap. Conring. §. 82. From this period the number of cities continued to encrease, and they became more populous and more wealthy. But cities were still destitute of municipal liberty or jurisdiction. Such of them as were situated in the Imperial demefnes, were subject to the Emperors, and their Comites, Milli, and other judges prelided in them, and dispensed Towns fittiated on the estate of a baron, were part of his fief, and he or his officers exercised a similar jurisdiction in them. Conring. ibid. § 73, 74. Heinec. Eleme Jur. Germ. lib. i. § 104. The Germans borrowed the institution of communities from the Italians. Knipschildius Tractatus Politico. Histor, Jurid. de Civitatum Imperialium Juribus, vol. i. lib. i. cap. 5. No. 23. Frederick Barbaroffa was the first Emperor who, from the same political consideration that influenced Lewis the Gross,

- Salar Con

Gross, multiplied communities in order to abridge the power of the nobles. A Pfeffel Abrege de l'Histoire & du Droit Publique d'Allemagne, 4to. p. 297. From the reign of Henry the Fowler, to the time when the German cities acquired full per fellion of their immunities, various circumstances contributed to their increase. The establishment of bishopricks (already mentioned) and the suiting of cathedrals, naturally induced many people is lettle there. It became the custom to hold councils and courts of judicature of every kind, ecclefiaftical as well as civil, In the eleventh century, many flaves were enfranchised, the greater part of which settled in cities. Several mines were discovered and wrought in different provinces, which drew together such a concourse of people, as gave rise to several cities. Conring. § 105. The cities began in the thirteenth century to form leagues for their mutual defence, and for repressing the diforders occasioned by the private wars among the barons, as well as by their exactions. This rendered the condition of the inhabitants of cities more secure than that of any order of men, and allured many to become members of their communities. Conring. § 94. There were inhabitants of three different ranks in the towns of Germany. The nobles, or familiæ, the citizens, or liberi, and the artizans who were flaves, or homines proprii. Knipschild. lib. ii. cap. 29. No. 13. Henry V. who began his reign A. D. 1106, infranchifed the flaves who were artifans or inhabitants in several towns, and gave them the rank of citizens, or liberi. Pfeffel, p. 254. Knipsch. lib. ii c. 29. No. 113, 119. Though the cities in Germany did not acquire liberty so early as those in France, they extended their privileges much farther. All the Imperial and free cities, the number of which is confiderable, acquired the full right of being immediate; by which term in the German jurispredence we are to understand, that they are subject to the Empire alone, and possess within their own precincts all the rights of complete and precincts all the rights of characters are generally cities, the great guardians of the Germanie libertus, are senselly known, and a would be improper to enter into any disquisition concerning minute particulars.

463

NOTE XVIII. SECT. I. p. 34.

THE Spanish historians are almost entirely filent concerning the origin and progress of communities in that kingdom; so that I cannot fix with any degree of certainty the time and manner of their first introduction there. It appears, however, from Mariana, vol. ii. p. 221, fol. Hagæ 1736, that in the year 1350, eighteen cities had obtained a feat in the Courtes of Castile. From the account which shall be given of their constitution and pretentions, Sect. III. of this volume, it is evident that their privileges and form of government were the fame with those of the other feudal corporations; and this, as well as the perfect similarity of political institutions and transactions in all the feudal kingdoms, may lead us to conclude, that communities were introduced there in the fame manner, and probably about the fame time, as in the other nations of Europe. In Aragon, as I shall have occasion to observe in a subsequent note, cities seem early to have acquired extensive immunities, together with a share in the legislature. In the year 1118, the citizens of Saragossa had not only attained political liberty, but they were declared to be of squal tank with the nobles of the second class; and many other inmanities that sown to perions in their rank of life in other parts Tunope were conferred upon them. Zurita Anales de Anales gon, tom it is an England, the effablishment of communities or corporations was posserior to the Conquest. The practice was sorrowed from France, and the privileges granted by the crown were perfectly limitar to thole which I have chumerated. But as this part of history is well known to most of my readers, I shall, without entering into any critical or minute discussion, refer them to authors who have fully illustrated this interesting point in the English history. Brady's Treatise of Boroughs. Madox, Firma Burgi, chap. i. fect. in. Hume's Hiftory of England, vol. i. append. i. and ii. It is not improbable that fome of the towns in England were formed into corporations, under the Saxon Kings, and that the charters granted by the Kings of the Norman race were not charters of enfranchisement from a flate of flavery, but a confirmation of privileges which , they already chlored. See Lord Lyttelton's History of Henry II. vol ai. p. 317. The linglish cities, however, were very inconfiderable in the twelfth century. A clear proof of this occurs in the history to which I liast referred. Fitzstephen, a contempograry author, gives a description of the city of Loudon in the reign of Henry II, and the terms in which he speaks of its trade, its wealth, and the fplendour of its inhabitants, would suggest no inadequate idea of its state at present, when it is the greatest and most epulent city of Europe. But all ideas of grandeur and magnificence are merely comparative. It appears from a contemporary author, Peter of Blois, archdeacon of London, who had good opportunity of being well informed, that this city, of which Fitzstephen gives such a pompous account, contained no more than forty thousand inhabitants. Ihid. 345, 316. The other cities were small in proportion, and in no condition to extent any extensive privileges. That the constitution of the boroughs in Scotland, in many circumstances, resembled that of the towns in France and England, is minifest from the Leges Burgorum annexed to the Regiam Majestatem.

244

1

· NOTE XIX. SECT. I. p. 39.

SOON after the introduction of the third estate into the national council, the spirit of liberty which that excited in France began to produce conspicuous effects. In several provinces of France, the nobility and communities formed affociations, whereby they bound themselves to defend their rights and privileges against the formidable and arbitrary proceedings of the King. The Count de Boulainvilliers has preserved a copy of one of these associations, dated in the year 1314, twelve years after the admission of the deputies from towns into the States Histoire de l'ancien gouvernement de la France, General. tom. ii. p. 94. The vigour with which the people afferted and prepared to maintain their rights, obliged their fovereigns to respect them. Six years after this affociation, Philip the Long issued a writ of summons to the community of Narbonne, in the following terms: "Philip, by the Grace, &c. to our wellbeloved, &c. As we defire with all our heart, and above all other things, to govern our kingdom and people in peace and tranquillity, by the help of God; and to reform our faid kingdom in fo far as it stands in need thereof, for the publick good, Mm Vol. 4. and

and for the benefit of our subjects, who in times past have been aggrieved and oppressed in diverse manners by the malice of fundry perfons, as we have learned by common report, as well as by the information of good men worthy of credit, and we having, descended in our danied which we have called to most in our good? city; fied to presentific to the utmost of our power, by all ways, and meads pullible, seconding to reason and justice, and willing that this Brould be done with folemnity and deliberation by the advice of the prelates, barons, and good towns of our realm, and particularly of you, and that it should be transacted agreeably to the will of God, and for the good of our people, therefore we command,"" &c. Mably, observat. ii. App. p. 386. I shall allow these to be only the formal words of a publick and legal stile, but the ideas. are fingular, and much more liberal and enlarged than one could expect in that age. A popular monarch of Great Britain. could hardly address himself to parliament, in terms more favourable to publick liberty. There occurs in the History of France a striking instance of the progress which the principles of liberty had made in that kingdom, and of the influence which the deputies of towns, had acquired in the States General. ring the calamities in which the war with England, and the captivity of King John, had involved France, the States General made a bold effort to extend their own privileges and jurifdiction. The regulations established by the States held A. D. 1355, concerning the mode of levying taxes, the administration of which they vested not in the crown, but in commissioners appointed by the States; concerning the coming of money; concerning the redress of the grievance of purveyance; concerning the regular administration of justice; are much more suitable to the genius of a republican government than that of a feudal monarchy.

monarchy. This curious statute is published, Ordon, t. iff, p. 19. Such as have not an opportunity to confult that large collection will find an abridgment of it, Hift. de France par Villaret, with the p. 130. or in Histoire de Boulainv. tom. ii. 213. The French history rising represent the bishop of Laon, and Maked Provoit of the chants of Paris, who had the chief direction this affembly feditious tribunes, violent, interested, ambitions, and aiming innovations subversive of the constitution and government of their country. That may have been the case, but these men possessed the considence of the people; and the measures which they proposed as the most popular and acceptable, plainly prove that the spirit of liberty had spread wonderfully, and that the ideas which then prevailed in France concerning government were extremely liberal. The States General held at Paris A. D. 1355, confifted of about eight hundred members, and above one half of thefe were deputies from towns. M. Secousse Pref. a Ordon. tom. iii. p. 48. It appears that in all the different affemblies of the States, held during the reign of John, the representatives of towns had great influence, and in every respect the third State was confidered as co-ordinate and equal to either of the other Ibid. passim. These spirited efforts were made in France long before the House of Commons in England acquired any confiderable influence in the legislature. As the feudal system was carried to its utmost height in France sooner than in England, fo it began to decline sooner in the former than in the latter king-In England, almost all attempts to establish or to extend the liberty of the people have been successful, in France they have proved unfortunate. What were the accidental events, or political causes which occasioned this difference, it is not my prefent business to enquire.

NOTE

****** *****

NOTE XX. SECT. I. p. 41.

In a former note, No VIII. I have enquired into the condition withat part of the people which was employed in agricult wire, and have apprecented the various hardships and committee of their structure. Vi hen charters of liberty and manumission were granted to fuch persons, they contained four concessions corresponding so the four capital grievances to which men in a flate of ferviouse are subject. 1. The right of dispoling of their persons by fale or grant was relinquished: 2. Power was given to them of conveying their property and effects by will or any other legal deed. Or if they happened to die intestate. it was provided that their property should go to their lawful heirs in the same manner as the property of other persons. g. The services and taxes which they owed to their superior or liege Lord, which were formerly arbitrary and imposed at pleafure, are pricifely ascertained. 4. They are allowed the privilege of marrying whatever person they chose, as formerly they could contract miq, marriage without their Lord's permission, and with no perfor but one of his flaves. All these particulars are found united in the charter granted Habitatoribus Montis-Britonie. A. D. 1376. Hist. de Dauphine, tom. i. p. 81. Many effectimilances concurred with those which I have mentioned in the text in procuring them deliverance from that wretched state. The gentle spirit of the Christian religion, together with the doctrines which it teaches, concerning the original equality of mankind, as well as the impartial eye with which the Almighty regards men of every condition, and admits them to a participation of his benefits, are inconfistent with servitude. But in this, as in many other instances, considerations of interest, and the maxims of false policy led men to a conduct inconsistent with their principles. They were to fensible, however, of the ancest fistency, that to set their fellow Christians at linear them fervitude was deemed an act of plety highly mercentons and acceptable to heaven. The humane spirit of the continue ligion fruggled with the maxims and magnetic state was and contributed more than any other circumstations in inthe practice of manumillion. When Pope Gregory des Green who flourished toward the end of the fixth county, granted liberty to some of his slaves, he gives this season for it, " Carn redemptor noster, totius conditor natura, ad hoc propitiatus humanam carnem voluerit assumere, ut divinitatie sue gratia, dirempto (quo tenebamur captivi) vinculo, priffinz nos reftitueret libertati; salubriter agitur, si homines, quos ab initio. liberos natura protulit, & jus gentium jugo substituit servitutis. in ea, quâ nati fuerant, manumittentis beneficio libertate reddantur. Gregor. Magn. ap. Potgiess. lib. iv. c. 14 2. Several laws or charters founded on reasons similar to this, are produced by the same author. Accordingly a great past of the charters of manumillion previous to the reign of Louis X, are. granted pro amore dei, pro remedie anime, & pro mercede. Murat. Antiq. Ital. vol. i. p. 849, 8 100 Du Cange. animæ. voc. manumifio. The formality of manumifion was executed. in a church, as a religious folemnity. The person to be fet free. was led round the great altar with a torch in his hand, he took. hold of the horns of the altar, and there the folemn words conferring liberty were pronounced. Du Cange, Ib. vol. iv. p. 4670. I shall transcribe a part of a charter of manumission granted. A. D. 1056; both as it contains a full account of the ceremonies used in this form of manumission, and as a specimen of the imperfect.

imperfect knowledge of the Latin tongue in that barbarous age. It is granted by Willa the widow of Hugo the Duke and Marquis, in favour of Cleriza one of her flaves. Et ideo nos Domine Wille inclife cometifie—libera et absolvo te Cleriza filia Unerto-pro tintore omnipotentis dei, & remedio luminarie anime bome nimorie quondam fupra fcripto Domini Ugo gloriollissimo, ut quardo illum Dominus de hac vita migrare, jufferit, pars iniqua non abeat potestatem ullam, sed anguelus Domini nostri Jesu Christi colocare dignitur illum inter sanctos dilectos suos; & beatus Petrus princips apostolorum, qui habed potestatem omnium animarum ligandi et absolvendi, ut ipsi absolvat animæ ejus de peccatis sui, & aperiad illum janua paradisi; pro eadem vero rationi, in mano mite te Benzo presbiter, ut vadat tecum in ecclesia sancti Bartholomæi apostoli; traad te tribus vicibus circa altare ipfius ceclefiæ cum cæreo apprehensum in manibus tuis & manibus suis; deinde exite ambulate in via quadrubio, ubi quatuor vie se deviduntur. Statimg; pro remedio luminarie anime bone memorie quondam supra scripto Domni ugo, et ipsi presbiter Benzo fecit omnia, & dixit, Ecce quatuor vie, ite et ambulate in quacunq; partem tibi placuerit, tam sic supra scripta Cleriza, qua nosque tui heredes, qui ab ac hora in antea nati, vel procreati fuerit utriusq; sexus, &c." Murat. ib. p. 853. Many other charters might have been felected, which, in point of grammar or flyle, are in no wife superior to this. Manumission was frequently granted on death-bed or by latter-will. As the minds of men are at that time awakened to fentiments of humanity and piety, these deeds proceeded from religious motives, and are granted pro redemptione anime, in order to obtain acceptance with God. Du Cange ubi supra, p. 470. & voc. servus vol.

vol. vi. p. 451. Another method of obtaining liberty was by entering into holy orders, or taking the vow in a This was permitted for feme time; but to many fixed My this means out of the hands of their mafters, that the ties are afterwards reffrained, and at fiast prohibited by the of atmost all the nations of Europe. Mr. 2. p. 842. formably the same principles, Princes, on the hirth of a fonor upon any other agreeable event, appointed a certain number of flaves to be enfranchised, as a testimony of their gratitude to God for that benefit. Marculfi Form. lib. i. cap. 39. There are several forms of manumission published by Marculfus, and all of them are founded on religious confiderations, in order to procure the favour of God, or to obtain the forgiveness of their fins. Lib. ii. c. 23, 33, 34, edit. Baluz. The same observation holds with respect to the other collections of Formulæ annexed to Marculfus. As fentiments of religion induced some to grant liberty to their fellow-Christians who growed under the yoke of fervitude; fo mistaken ideas concerning devotion led others to relinquish their liberty. When a person conceived an extraordinary respect for the saint who was the patron of any church or monastery in which he was accustomed to attend religious worthip, it was not unufual among men possessed with an excess of superstitious reverence, to give up themselves and their posterity to be the slaves of the faint. Mabillon. de re Diplomat. lib. vi. 632. The oblati or voluntary flaves of churches or monasteries were very numerous, and may be divided into three different classes. The first were such as put themselves and effects under the protection of a particular church or monaftery, binding themselves to defend its privileges and property against every aggressor. These were prompted to do so, not merely by devotion, but in order to obtain that security which arose from the protection of the church. were rather valials han flaves, and foractimes persons of noble birth found it prude t to secure the protection of the church this manner. Persons of the second class bound themisting to pay an annual tax of quit-rent out of their effates to a church or monaflery. Besides this, they sometimes engaged to perform certain fervices. They were called censuales. The last class consisted of such as actually renounced their interty, and became flaves in the strict and proper sense of the word. These were called ministeriales, and enflaved their bodies, as some of the charters bear, that they might procure the liberty of their fouls. Potgiesserus de statu servorum, lib. i. cap. i. & 6. How zealous the clergy were to encourage the opinions which led to this practice will appear from a clause in a charter by which one gives up himself as a flave to a monastery, " Cum sit omni carnait ingenuitate generofius extremum quodeumq; Dei fervitium, scilicet quod terrena nobilitas multor plerumq; vitiosum servos faciti lervinas vero Christi nobiles virtutibus reddit nemo autem lani rapitis virtutibus vitia comparaverit, claret pro certo eum esse generosiorem, qui se Dei servitio præbuerit proniorem. Quod ego Ragnaldus intelligens, &c." Another author fays, Eligens magis effe fervus Dei quam libertus faculi, firmiter credens & sciens, quod servire Deo, regnare est, summaque ingenuitas sit in qua servitus comparabatur Christi, &c. Du Cange, voc. oblatus, vol. iv. p. 1286, 1287. It does not appear, that the enfranchisement of slaves was a frequent practice while the feudal fystem preserved its vigour. On the contrary, there were laws which fet bounds to this practice as detrimental to society. Potgiess. lib. iv. c. 2. § 6. The inferior

rior order of men owed the recovery of their liberty to the decline of that aristocratical policy, which lodged the most extensive power in the hands of a few members of the society, and depressed all the rest. When Louis X. issued his ordenance. feveral flaves had been fo long accustomed to fervitude, and their made were so much debated by that appy lituation. that they refused to accept of the liberty which was offered them. D'Ach. Spicel. v. xi. p. 387. Long after the reign of Louis X, feveral of the French nobility continued to affert their ancient dominion over their flaves. It appears from an ordonance of the famous Bertrand de Guesclin Constable of France, that the custom of enfranchising them was considered as a pernicious innovation. Morice Mem, pour servir des preuves à l'hist, de Bret, tom, ii. p. 100. In some instances when the prædial flaves were declared to be freemen, they were ftill bound to perform certain fervices to their ancient matters, and were kept in a state different from other subjects steing restricted either from purchasing land, or becoming members of a community within the precincts of the maner to which they formerly belonged. Martene & Darand, Thefaur. Anecdot. vol. i. p. 914. This, however, seems not to have been common, -- There is no general law for the manumiffion of flaves in the Statute-book of England similar to that which has been quoted from the ordonances of the Kings of France. Though the genius of the English constitution seems early to have favoured personal liberty, personal servitude, nevertheless, continued long in England in some particular places. In the year 1514, we find a charter of Henry VIII. enfranchifing two flaves belonging to one of his manors. Rym. Fæder. vol. xiii. p. 470. As late as the year 1574, there is a commission from Queen Eli-Vol. I. zabeth NA zabeth with respect to the manumission of certain bondmen belonging to her. Rymer. in Observat. on the statutes, &c. p. 251.

NOTE XXI. SECT. I. p. 47.

THERE is no exponent the middle ages more fingles than that of private war. It is a right of fo great importance, and prevailed to arriverfally, that the regulations concerning it make a confiderable figure in the fystem of laws during the middle ages. M. de Montelquien, who has unravelled fo many intricate points in feudal jurisprudence, and thrown light on so many customs formerly obscure and unintelligible, was not led by his subject to consider this. I shall therefore give a more minute account of the customs and regulations which directed a practice. fo contrary to the present ideas of civilized nations concerning government and order. I. Among the ancient Germans, as well as other nations in a fimilar flate of fociety, the right of avenging miniries was a private and personal right, exercised by force of arms, without any reference to an unipire, or any appeal to a magistrate for decision. The clearest proofs of this were produced Note VI. 2. This practice subfifted among the barbarous nations after their fettlement in the provinces of the Empire which they conquered; and as the causes of diffention among them multiplied, their family feuds and private wars became more frequent. Proofs of this occur in their early hiftorians. Greg. Turon. hist. lib. vii. c. 2. lib. viii. c. 18. lib. x. c. 27. and likewise in the codes of their laws. not only allowable for the relations to avenge the injuries of their family, but it was incumbent on them. Thus by the laws of the Angli and Werini, ad quemcunque hereditas terræ pervenerit, ad illum vestis bellica id est lorica & ultio proximi, & folatio leudis, debet pertinere, tit. vi. § 5. sp. Lindenbr. Leg. Salic. tit. 63. Leg. Longob. lib. ii. tit. 14. § 10. 3. None but gentlemen, or persons of noble birth, had the right of private war. All disputes among slaves, vil-" latte the inhabitants of towns, and frequent of inferior condition were decided in the courts of influence he twees gentlemen and persons of inserior lank were terminated in the same manner. The right of private war hipported mobile lity of birth, and equality of rank in the contenting parties. Beaumanor Coustumes de Beauv. ch. lix. p. 300; Ordon. des Rois de France, tom. ii. 395. § xvii. 508. § xv. &c. dignified ecclefiafticks likewife claimed and exercited the right of private war; but as it was not altogether decent for them to profeque quarrels in person, advocati or vidames were chosen by the feveral monasteries and bishopricks. These were commonly men of high rank and reputation, who became the protectors of the churches and convents by whom were elected; espoused their quarrels, and sought their battles; armis omnia que erant ecclesie viriliter defendement, et vigilanter protegebant. Brussel Usage des fiefe tod. L. p. 144. Cange voc. advocatus. On many occasions, the martial ideas to which ecclefiallicks of noble birth were accustomed, made them forget the pacifick spirit of their profession, and led them into the field in person at the head of their vassals, "flamma, terro, cade, pollessiones ecclesiarum prælati defendebant." Guido Abbas ap. Du Cange. Ib. p. 179.—-4. It was not every many or trespass that gave a gentleman a title to make war upon his adverfary. Atrocious acts of violence, infults and ad, onts publickly committed, were legal and permitted motives for taking arms against the authors of them. Such crimes as the now punished capitally in civilized nations, at that time juffitted private holdlitics. Beauman, ch. lix. Du Cange Nn2 Differt.

Differt. xxix. fur Joinville, p. 331. But though the avenging of injuries was the only motive that could legally authorize a private war, yet disputes concerning civil property, often gave rise to hostilities, and were terminated by the sword. Du Cange Differt. p. 332. 5. All persons present when any quarter arole, or any aft of violence was committed, were included in the war which it ofcasioned, for it was supposed to be impossible for any man in such a situation, to remain neutral, without taking fide with one or other of the contending parties. Beauman. p. 300.--6. All the kindred of the two principals in the war were included in it, and obliged to cipoule the quarrel of the chieftain with whom they were connected. Du Cange, ib. 332. This was founded on the maxim of the ancient Germans, "fuscipere tam inimicitias seu patris, seu propinqui, quam amicitias, necesse est;" a maxim natural to all rude and fimple nations, among which the form of lociety, and political union strengthens such a sentiment. The method of ascertaining the degree of affinity which obliged a section to take part in the quarrel of a kiniman was curious. While the church prohibited the marriage of perions within the feventh degree of affinity, the vengeance of private war extended as far as this abfurd prohibition, and all who had fuch a remote connection with any of the principals were involved in the calamities of war. But when the church relaxed fomewhat of its rigour, and did not extend its prohibition of marrying beyond the fourth degree of affinity, the same restriction took place in the conduct of private war. Beauman. 303. Du Cange Differt. 333.---7. A private war could not be carried on between two full brothers, because both have the same common kindred, and confequently neither have any persons bound to stand by him against the other, in the contest; but two brothers of the half blood might wage war, because each of them has a distinct kindred. Beauman. p. 200. The vaffals of each principal in any private war were involved in the contest, because by the feudal maxims they were bound to take arms in defence of the chieftain of whom they held, and to airly him in every quarrel. As foon, therefore, as the fendal tenures were introduced, and this artificial connection was estalished between vassals and the baron of whom they held, vassals came to be considered as in the same state with relations. Because man. 3033-9. Private wars were very frequent for feveral centuries. Nothing contributed more to increase those diforders in government, and that ferocity of manners which the nations of Europe to that wretched flate which diffing niffed the period of history which I am reviewing. Nothing was such an obstacle to the introduction of a regular administration of justice. Nothing could more effectually discourage industry, or retard the progress and cultivation of the arts of peace. Private wars were carried on with all the destructive rage, which is to be dreaded from violent refentment when armed with force, and authorised by law. It appears from the laws prohibiting or restraining the exercise of private hostilities; that the invasion of the most barbarous enemy could not be more desolating to a country, or more fatal to its inhabitants, than those intestine Ordon. t. i. p. 701. tom. ii. 395, 408, 507, &c. contemporary historians describe the excesses committed in prosecution of these quarrels, in such terms, as excite assonishment I shall mention only one passage from the history and horror. of the Holy War, by Guibert, Abbot of Nogent: " Erat co tempore maximis ad invicem hostilitatibus, totius Francorum regni facla turbatio; crebra ubiq; latrocinia, viarum obfessio; audiebantur pallim, immo fiebant incendia infinita; nullis præter fola & indomita capiditate exilentibus caufis extruebantur pralia;

& ut brevi totum claudam, quicquid obtutibus cupidorum subjaccbat, nusquam attendendo cujus esset, prædæ patebat. Gesta Dei per Francos, vol. i. p. 482.

HAVING thus collected the chief regulations which coulons had established with the right and exercise of prevate war, I shall enumerate in chronological order the various expedients employed to abolish or restrain this fatal custom." 1. The first expedient employed by the civil magistrate in order to set some bounds to the violence of private revenge, was the fixing by law the fine as composition to be paid for each different crime. The injured serion was originally the fole judge concerning the nature of the wrong which he had fuffered, the degree of vengeance which he should exact, as well as the species of attonement or reparation with which he should rest satisfied. Resentment became of course as implacable as it was ficree. It was often a point of honour not to forgive, nor to be reconciled. This made it necessary to fix those compositions which make so great a figure in the laws of barbarous nations. The nature of crimes and offences was estimated by the magistrate, and the sum due to the person offended was affect tained with a minute, and often a whimfical accuracy. Rotharis, the legislator of the Lombards, who reigned about the middle of the feventh century, difcovers his intention both in afcertaining the composition to be paid by the offender, and in increasing its value; it is, says he, that the enmity may be extinguished, the prosecution may cease, and peace may be restored. Leg. Langob. lib. i. tit. 7. $ 10.----2. About the beginning of the ninth century, Charlemagne thuck at the root of the evil, and enacted, "That when any person had been guilty of a crime, or had committed an outrage, he should immediately submit to the penance which the church impoled, imposed, and offer to pay the composition which the law prefcribed; and if the injured person or his kindred should refuse to accept of this, and prefume to avenge themselves by force of arms, their lands and properties should be forfeited. Capital. A. B. So2. edit. Baluz. vol. i. 371 .-- 3. But in this, as well in other regulations, the genius of Charles negric advanced fore the spirit of his age. The ideas of his contemporaries concerning regular government were too imperfect, and their ners too fic ce to submit to this law. Private wars with a fire calamities which the occasioned, became more frequent than ever after the death of that great monarch. His fire the unable to restrain them. The church found it never in them. terpose. The most early of these interpositions now extent is towards the end of the tenth century. In the year ooo, several Bishops in the south of France assembled, and published various regulations, in order to fet some bounds to the violence and frequency of private wars; if any person within their dioceffes should venture to transgress, they ordained that he should be excluded from all Christian privileges during his life, and be denied Christian burial after his death. Du Mont Corps Diplomatique, tom. i. p. 41. Thefe, however, were only partial remedies; and therefore a council was held at Limoges, A. D. 994. The bodies of the faints, according to the custom of those ages, were carried thither; and by these sacred relicks men were exhorted to lay down their arms, to extinguish their animosities. and to fwear that they would not for the future violate the publick peace by their private hostilities. Bouquet Recueil des Hillor, vol. x. p. 49, 147. Several other councils issued decrees to the same effect. Du Cange Differt. 343.---4. But the authority of councils, how venerable soever in those ages, was not fufficient to abolifh a cuftom which flattered the pride of the nobles.

nobles, and gratified their favourite passions. The evil grew so intolerable, that it became necessary to employ supernatural means for suppressing it. A bishop of Aquitaine, A. D. 1032, pretended that an angel had appeared to him, and brought him à moiting from heaven, enjoining men to cease from their no Ailmics, and to be reconciled to each other. It was during a feafon of public calamity that he published this revelation. minds of men were disposed to receive pious impressions; and willing to perform any thing in order to avert the wrath of heaven. A general peace and cellation from hostilities took place, and continued for seven years; and a resolution was formed that no man though in times to come attack or molest his adversaries during the scasons set apart for celebrating the great festivals of the church, or from the evening of Thursday in each week to the morning of Monday in the week ensuing, the intervening days being confidered as particularly holy, our Lord's Passion having happened on one of these days, and his Resurrection on another. A change in the dispositions of men so sudden, and which produced a resolution to unexpected, was considered as miraculous; and the respite from hostilities which followed upon it, was called The Truce of God. Glaber. Rodulphus Hiftor. lib. v. ap. Bouquet. vol. x. p. 59. This, from being a regulation or concert in one kingdom, became a general law in Christendom, and was confirmed by the authority of the Pope, and the violators were subjected to the penalty of excommunication. Corpus Jur. Canon. Decretal. lib. i. tit. 34. c. 1. Du Cange Glossar. voc. Trenga. An act of the council of Toulujes in Rouffillon, A. D. 1041, containing all the stipulations required by the truce of God, is published by Dom de Vic & Dom Vaisette Hist. de Languedoc, tom. ii. Preuves, p. 206. A ceffation from hostilities during three compleat days in every week, allowed fuch a confiderable confiderable space for the passions of the antagonists to cook and for the people to enjoy a respite from the calamities of war, as well as to take measures for their own security, that, if this truce of God had been exactly observed, lymust have gone far towards putting an end to private wars. This, however, feems not to have been the case; the nobles, difregarding the truce, profecuted their quarrels without interruption as formerly nimirum tempestate, universa provincia adeo devastationes em tinuz impoltunitate inquietantur, ut ne ipla, pro oblervatione divinæ pacis, professa facramenta custodiantur. Antes finergensis apud Datt de pace imperii publica, p. 13. The violent spirit of the nobility could not be restrained by any engagements. The complaints of this were frequent; and bifhops, in order to compel them to renew their vows and promises of ceasing from their private wars, were obliged to enjoin their clergy to suspend the performance of divine service, and the exercise of any religious function within the parishes of such as were refractory and obstinate. Hist. de Langued. par. D. D. de Vic & Vaisette, tom. ii. Preuves, p. 118 .--- 5. The people, eager to obtain relief from their sufferings, called in a fecond time a pretended revelation to their aid. Towards the end of the twelfth century, a carpenter in Guienne gave out that Jesus Christ together with the blessed Virgin had appeared to him, and having commanded him to exhort mankind to peace, had given him, as a proof of his million, an image of the Virgin holding her fon in her arms, with this infeription, I amb of God, who takest away the sins of the world, give us peace. This low fanatick addressed himself to an ignorant age, prone to credit what was marvellous. He was received as an inspired meffenger of God. Many prelates and barons affembled at Puv, and took an oath, not only to make peace with all their Vol. I. Oο awo own enemies, but to attack fuch as refused to lay down their arms, and to be reconciled to their enemies. They formed an affociation for this purpose, and assumed the honourable name of the Brotherhood of God. Robertus de Monte Michaele ap. M. de Lauriere Fref. tom. i. Ordon. p. 29. But the influence of this superstitious terror or devotion was not of long continuance.—6. The civil magistrate was obliged to exert his authority in order to check a custom which threatened the diffoliation of government. Philip Augustus, as some imagine, or St. Louis, as is more probable, published an ordonance, A. D. 1245, prohibiting any person to commence hostilities against the friends and vasfals of his adversary, until forty days after the commission of the crime or offence which gave rise to the quarrel; declaring, that if any man prefumed to transgress this statute, he should be considered as guilty of a breach of publick peace, and be tried and punished by the judge ordinary as a traitor. Ordon. tom. i. p. 56. This was called the Royal Truce, and afforded time for the violence of refentment to sublide, as well as leifure for the good offices of such as were willing to compose the difference. The happy effects of this regulation feem to have been confiderable, if we may judge from the folicitude of fucceeding monarchs to enforce it. -7. In order to reftrain the exercise of private war still farther, Philip the Fair, towards the close of the same century, A. D. 1296, published an ordonance commanding all private hostilities to cease, while he was engaged in war against the enemies of the state. Ordon. tom. i. p. 328, 300. This regulation, which feems to be almost effential to the existence and preservation of society, was often renewed by his successors, and being enforced by the regal authority, proved a confiderable check to the destructive contests of the nobles. Both these regulations.

regulations, introduced first in France, were adopted by the other nations of Europe.—8. The evil, however, was so inveterate, that it did not yield to all these remedie. No somer was publick peace established in any kingdom, than the barons senewed their private hostilities. They are only struggled to maintain this pernicious right, but to fecure the exercise of it without any restraint. Upon the death of Philip the Fair, the nobles of different provinces in France formed affociations, and presented remonstrances to his successor, demanding the repeal of several laws, which he had abridged the privileges of their order. Among these, the right of private war is always mentioned as one of the most valuable; and they claim that the restraint imposed by the truce of God, the royal truce, as well as that arising from the ordonance of the year 1296, should be taken off. In some instances, the two sons of Philip who mounted the throne successively, eluded their demands; in others, they were obliged to make concessions. Ordon. tome i. p. 551, 557, 561, 573. The ordonances to which I here refer, are of fuch length that I cannot infert them, but they are extremely curious, and may be peculiarly instructive to an English reader, as they throw considerable light on that period of English history, in which the attempts to circumscribe the regal prerogative were carried on, not by the people struggling for liberty, but by the nobles contending for power. It is not necellary to produce any evidence of the continuance and frequency of private wars under the successors of Philip the Fair.—9. A practice fomewhat fimilar to the royal truce was introduced, in order to strengthen and extend it. Bonds of affurance, or mutual fecurity, were demanded from the parties at variance, by which they obliged themselves to abitain from all hostilities, either during a time mentioned in the bond, or for ever; and became subject to heavy penalties, if they violated this obliga-

Theid bonds were fometimes granted voluntarily, but more frequencily exacted by the authority of the civil magistrate. Upon a petition from the party who felt himself weakest, the magistrate summoned his adversary to appear in court, and obliged him to give a bond of affurance. If, after that, he committed any farther hostilities, he became subject to all the penalties of treason. This restraint on private war was known in the age of St. Louis. Establissemens, liv. i. c. 28. It was frequent in Bretagne, and what is very remarkable, such bonds of afforance were given mutually between raffals and the lord of whom they held. Oliver de Clisson grants one to the Duke of Bretagne, his sovereign. Morice Mem. pour servir de preuves à Phist. de Bret. tom. i. p. 846. ii. p. 371. Many examples of bonds of assurance in other provinces of France are collected by Bruffel. tom. ii. p. 856. The nobles of Burgundy remonstrated against this practice, and obtained exemption from it as an encroachment on the privileges of their order. Ordon. tom. i. p. 558. This mode of security was first introduced in cities, and the good effects of it having been felt there, was extended to the nobles. See Note XVI. 10. The calamities occasioned by private wars, became at some times so intolerable, that the nobles entered into voluntary affociations, binding themselves to refer all matters in dispute, whether concerning civil property, or points of honour, to the determination of the majority of the affociates. Morice Mem. pour servir de preuves à l'hist. de Bret. tom. ii. p. 728.---11. But all these expedients proving ineffectual, Charles VI. A. D. 1413, iffued an ordonance expresly prohibiting private wars on any pretext whatfoever, with power to the judge ordinary to compel all persons to comply with this injunction, and to punish fuch as should prove refractory or disobedient, by imprisoning their persons, scizing their goods, and appointing the officers of justice, Mangeurs & Gasteurs, to live at free quarters on their cstate. If those who were disobedient to this edic could not be personally arrested, he appointed their friends and vassals to be seized, and detained until they gave surety for keeping the peace; and he abolished all laws, customs or privileges which might be pleaded in opposition to this ordenance. Orden. tom. x. p. 138. How slow is the progress of reason and of civil order! Regulations which to us appear so equitable, obvious, and simple, required the efforts of civil and exclessals authority, during several centuries, to introduce and establish them. Even posterior to this period, Louis XI. was estimated to abolish private wars in Dauphine, by a particular chief. A. D. 1451. Du Cange dissert, p. 348.

This note would swell to a disproportional bulk, if I should attempt to enquire with the same minute attention into the progress of this pernicious custom in the other countries of Europe. In England, the ideas of the Saxons concerning personal revenge, the right of private wars, and the composition due to the party offended, feem to have been much the fame with those which prevailed on the continent. The law of Ina de Vindicantibus, in the eighth century, Lamb. p. 3; those of Edmund in the tenth century, de homicidio, Lamb. p. 72. & de inimicitiis, p. 76; and those of Edward the Confessor, in the eleventh century, de temporibus & diebus pacis, or Treuga Dei, Lamb. p. 126, are perfectly fimilar to the ordonances of the French Kings their contemporaries. The laws of Edward, de pace regis, are still more explicit than those of the French Monarchs, and, by feveral provisions in them, discover that a more perfect police was established in England at that period. Lambard, p. 128. fol. verf. Even after the conquest, private ware, and the regulations for preventing them, were not altogether unknown, as appears from Madox Formulare Anglicanum, No. OXLV. and from the extracts from Domesday Book, published by Gale Scriptores hist. Britan. p. 759, 777. well known Just in the form of an English indictment, which, as an apparation of the criminal's guilt, mentions his having affaulted a person, who was in the peace of God and of the King, feems to be borrowed from the Treuga or Pax Dei and the Pax Regis which I have explained. But after the conquest, the mention of private wars among the nobility, occurs more rarely in the English history, than in that of any other European nation, and no laws concerning them are to be found in the body of their statutes. Such a change in their own manners, and such a variation from those of their neighbours is remarkable. Is it to be ascribed to the extraordinary power which William the Norman acquired by right of conquest, and transinitted to his successors, which rendered the execution of justice more vigorous and decisive, and the jurisdiction of the King's court more extensive than under the Monarchs on the continent? Or, was it owing to the fettlement of the Normans in England, who having never adopted the practice of private war in their own country, abolished it in the kingdom which they conquered? It is afferted in an Ordonance of John King of France, that in all times past, perfons of every rank in Normandy have been prohibited to wage war, and the practice has been deemed unlawful. Ordon. tom. ii. p. 407. If this fact were certain, it would go far towards explaining the peculiarity which I have mentioned. But as there are some English Acts of Parliament, which, according to the remark of the learned author of the Observations on the Statutes, chiefly the more ancient, which recite falshoods, it may be added, that this is not peculiar to the laws of that country. Notwithslanding the positive affertion contained in this publick law law of France, there is good reason for considering it as a statute which recites a falshood. This, however, is not the place for discussing that point. It is an inquiry not unworthy the curio-sity of an English antiquarian.

10

PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

In Castile, the pernicious practice of private war prevailed, and was authorised by the customs and law of the kingdom. Leges Tauri. tit. 76. cum commentario Anton. Comezii, p. 551. As the Castilian nobles were no less turbulent than powerful, their quarters and hostilities involved their country in many calamities. Innumerable proofs of this occur in Mariana. In Aragon, the right of private revenge was likewise authorised by law; exercised in its full extent, and accompanied with the same unhappy consequences. Hieron. Blanca Comment. de rebus Arag. ap. Schotti. Hifpan. illustrat. vol. iii. p. 733. Lex Jacobi I. A. D. 1247. Fueros & Observancias del Reyno de Aragon, lib. ix. p. 182. Several confederacies between the Kings of Aragon and their nobles, for the restoring of peace, founded on the truce of God, are still extant. Petr. de Marca. Marca sivi Limes Hispanic. App. 1303, 1388, 1428. As early as the year 1165, we find a combination of the King and court of Aragon, in order to abolish the right of private war, and to punish those who presumed to claim that privilege. Anales de Aragon por Zurita, vol. i. p. 73. But the evil was so inveterate, that Charles V. A. D. 1519. was obliged to publish a law enforcing all former regulations tending to suppress this practice. Fueros & Observanc. lib. ix. 183. b.

THE Lombards, and other northern nations who fettled in Italy, introduced the fame maxims concerning the right of revenge into that country, and these were followed by the same effects.' As the progress of the evil was perfectly similar to what happened in France, the expedients employed to check its career, or to extirpate it finally, resembled those which I have enumerated. Murat. Ant. Ital. vol. ii. p. 306.

٠,

In Germany the diforders and calamities occasioned by the right of private war were greater and more intolerable than in any other country of Europe. The Imperial authority was so much shaken and enfeebled by the violence of the civil wars, excited by the contests between the Popes and the Emperors of the Franconian and Suabian lines, that not only the nobility but the cities acquired almost independant power, and scorned all subordination and obedience to the laws. The frequency of these faide or private wars, are often mentioned in the German Annals, and the fatal effects of them are most pathetically described, Datt. de pace Imper. pub. lib. i. cap. v. nº. 30. & passim. The Germans early adopted the Treuga Dei, which was first established in France. This, however, proved but a temporary and ineffectual remedy. The diforders multiplied fo fast, and grew so enormous, that they threatened the dissolution of society, and compelled the Germans to have recourse to the only remedy of the evil, viz. an absolute prohibition of private wars. Emperor, William, published his edict to this purpose, A. D. 1255, an hundred and fixty years previous to the ordonance of Charles VI. in France. Datt. lib. i. cap. 4. n°. 20. But neither he nor his fuccessors had authority to secure the observance of it. This gave rife to a practice in Germany, which conveys to us a shiking idea both of the intolerable calamities occasioned by private wars, and of the feebleness of government during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. The cities and nobles entered into alliances and affociations, by which they bound themselves to maintain the publick peate, and to make war on fuch as should violate it. This was the origin of the league of the Rhine.

Rhine, of Suabia, and of many finaller confederacies distinguithed by various names. The rife and beneficial effects of these associations are traced by Datt with great acciracy. Whatprecedent in the Empire from the beginning of the twelfth century to the close of the fifreenth, Germany owes to these leagues. During that period, political order, respect for the laws, together with the equal administration of justice, made considerable progress in Germany. Here final and perpetual abolition of the right Imperial authority was by that time more tirmly elicities ideas of men with respect to government and strange auton were become more just. That barbarous and permanent privilege which the nobles had so long possessed, was declared to be incompatible with the happiness and existence of society. in order to terminate any differences which might arise among the various numbers of the Germanick body, the Imperial chamber was inflitured with fupreme jurisdiction, to judge without appeal in every question brought before it. That court has subfifted fince that period, forming there's espectable tribunal, of essential importance in the German constitution. Datt, lib. iii. Pfeffel abregé de l'Histoire du Droit, & p. 556. iv. v.

NOTE XXII. SECT. I. p. 56. [Y]

IT would be tedious and of little use to enumerate the various modes of appealing to the justice of God, which superstition introduced during the ages of ignorance. I shall mention only one, because we have an account of it in a placitum or trial in the presence of Charlemagne, from which we may learn the imvoci. I. P p perfect manner in which justice was administered even during In the year 775, a contest arose between the bishop his reign. of Paris and the abbot of St. Denys, concerning the property of a small abovey. Each of them exhibited deeds and records, in order to prove the right to be in them. Instead of trying authenticity, or considering the import of these, the referred to de judicium crucis. Each produced a perion, who, during the celebration of mais, flood before the crois with his arms expanded; and he whose representative first became weary and altered his posture, lost the rafe. The perion completed by the bishop on this occasion and less strength or less special the deversary, and the question was decided in favour of Mabillon de re Diplomat. lib. vi. p. 498. If a Prince to enlightened as Charlemagne countenanced toch an abfurd mode of decision, it is no wonder that other monarchs should tolerate it fo long. M. de Montesquieu has treated of the trial by judicial combat at confiderable length. The two talents which diftinguish that illustrious author, industry in tracing all the circumstances of section and obscuse institutions, and fagacity in penetrating into the causes and principles which contributed to chablish them, are equally conspicuous in his observations on this subject. To these I refer the reader, as they contain most of the principles by which I have endeavoured to explain this practice. De l'Esprit des Loix, lib. xxviii. It feems to be probable from the remarks of M.de Montesquieu, as well as from the facts produced by Muratori, tom. iii. Differt. xxxviii. that the appeals to the justice of God by the experiments with fire and water, &c. were practifed by the people who fettled in the different provinces of the Roman Empire, before they had recourse to the judicial combat. The judicial combat, however, was the most ancient mode of terminating any controversy among the barbarous nations in their neiginal settlements. This is evident from Velleius Paterculus, lib. ii. c. 118. who informs us, that all questions which were decided among the Romans by legal trial, were accuminated among the Gereius by arms. The same thing appears in the ancient laws and customs of the Swedes, quoted by jo. O. Stiernbick de Jure Suconum & Gothorum vetusto. 4to. Holmize 1682, lib. i. c. 7. It is probable that when the various tribes which availed the Empire were conversed to Christianity, the repugnate of the custom of allowing pateral combats to the present the degrees, several circumstances which I have a them to refuse it.

IT feems likewife to be probable from a law quoted by Stiernhöök in the treatife which I have mentioned, that the judicial combat was originally permitted, in order to determine points respecting the personal character of reputation of individuals, and was afterwards extended not only to principal cales, but to questions & concerning property. The words of thelaware, "if any man shall fay to another these reproachful words, " you are not a man equal " to other men," or, " you have not the heart of a man," and the other shall reply, "I am a man as good as you." Let them meet on the highway. If he who first gave offence appear, and the person offended absent himself, let the latter be deemed worse than he was called; let him not be admitted to give evidence in judgment either for man or woman, and let him not have the privilege of making a testament. If the person offended appear, and he who gave the offence be absent, let him call upon the other thrice with a loud voice, and make a mark upon the carth, and then let him who absented himself be deemed infamous, because he uttered words which he durst not support. If both shall appear properly armed, and the person offended shall fall in the combat, let a half compensation be paid for his But if the person who gave the offence shall fall, let, death. it be imputed to his own reshness. The petulance of his minute hath been fatal to him. Bet him lie in the field without any compensation being demanded for his death." Lex Uplandica ap. Stiern. p. 76. Martial people were extremely delicate with respect to every thing that affected their reputation as soldiers. By the laws of the Salians, if any man contact another a bare, or accuracy him and having left his shield in the field of battle, he the pay a large fine. Leg. Sal. tit. xxxii. § 4. 6. By the hand the Lombards if any one called another arga, i. e. a good for nothing fellow, he might immediately challenge him to combat. Leg. Longob. lib. i. tit. v. § 1. By the law of the Salians, if one called another cenitus, a term of reproach equivalent to arga, the fine which he was bound to pay was very high. Tit. xxxii. § 1. Paulus Diaconus relates the violent impression which this reproschial expression made upon one of his countrymen, and the fatal effects with which it was attended. De Gestis Longobard, lib. vi. c. 24. Thus the ideas concerning the point of honour, which we are apt to confider as a modern refinement, as well as the practice of duelling, to which it gave rife, are derived from the notions of our ancestors, while in a flate of fociety very little improved.

P p 2

As M. de Montesquieu's view of this subject did not lead him to consider every circumstance relative to judicial combats, I shall mention some particular facts necessary for the illustration of what I have said with respect to them. A remarkable instance stance occurs of the decision of an abstract point of law by combat. A question arose in the tenth century concerning the right of representation, which was not then fixed though now unliverfally established in every part of Europe. " It was a matter of some and dispute, (saith the histories) whether the sons of a fon ought to be reckoned among the children of the family, and fucceed equally with their uncles, if their father happened to die while their grandfather was alive. An affembly was called to deliberate on this point, and it was the general appinion that it ought to be remained to the examination and recision of judges. But the Emperor following a better continued and debrois of dealing honourably with his people and not a the matter to be decided by battle between two changes. He who appeared in behalf of the right of children to represent. their deceased father was victorious; and it was established, by a perpetual decree, that they should hereafter share in the inheritance together with their uncles. Wittickindus Corbeins lib. Annal. ap. M. de Lauriere Pref. Ordon. vol. i. p. xxxiii. we can suppose the caprice of folly to lead men to any action more extravagant than this of settling a point in law by combat, it must be that of referring the truth or falsehood of a religious opinion to be decided in the fame manner. To the difgrace of human reason, it has been capable even of this extravagance. A question was agitated in Spain in the eleventh century, whether the Musarabic Liturgy and ritual which had been used in the churches of Spain, or that approved of by the See of Rome, which differed in many particulars from the other, contained the form of worship most acceptable to the Deity. The Spaniards contended zealously for the ritual of their ancestors. The Popes urged them to receive that to which they

they had given their infallible fanction. A violent contest arose. The nobles proposed to decide the controversy by the fword. The king approved of this method of decision. Two knights in compleat armour entered the lifts. John Ruys de Matanca, the champion of the Mularabic Liturgy, was victorious. Queen and Archbishop of Toledo, who favoured the other form, infifted on having the matter fubmitted to another trial, and had interest enough to prevail in a request, inconsistent with the laws of combat, which being confidered as an appeal to God, the decision ought to have been acquieted in as final. A great fire and andled. A copy of contracting was cast into the distance. It was agreed that the book which stood this proof, and remained untouched, should be received in all the churches of Spain. The Musarabic Liturgy triumphed likewise in this trial, and if we may believe Roderigo de Toledo, remained unhurt by the fire, when the other was reduced to ashes. The Queen and Archbishop had power orart sufficient to elude this decision also, and the use of the Musarabic form of devotion was permitted only in certain diurches. A determination no less extraordinary than the whole transaction. Rodr. de Toledo, quoted by P. Orleans, Hist. de Revol. d'Espagne, tom. i. p. 217. Mariana, lib. i. c. 18. vol. i. p. 378. -A remarkable proof of the general use of trial by combat, and of the prædilection for that mode of decision occurs in the laws of the Lombards. It was a custom in the middle ages, that any perfon might chuse the law to which he would be subjected; and by the prescriptions of that law he was obliged to regulate his transactions, without being bound to comply with any practice authorized by other codes of law. Persons who had subjected themselves to the Roman law, and adhered to the ancient jurisprudence, prudence, as far as any knowledge of it was retained in those ages of ignorance, were exempted from paying any regard to the forms of proceedings established by the laws of the Burgundians, Lombards, and other barbarous people. But the Emperor Crist direct contradiction to this received maxim, ordained. "That all persons, under whatever law they lived, even although it were the Roman law, should be bound to conform to the edicts concerning the trial by combat." Leg. Longob. lib. ii. tit. 55. § 38. While the judicial combat subsisted proof by charters, contracts, at ather deeds, became ineffectual and even this species of evidence calculated to render the courts certain and deciling, was eluded. When a charge was instrument was produced by one of the parties, his appenent might challenge it, affirm that it was false and forged, and offer to prove this by combat. Leg. Longob. ib. § 34. It is true, that among the reasons enumerated by Beaumanoir, on account of which judges might refuse to permit a trial by combat, one is, "If the point in contest can be clearly proved or aftertained by other evidence." Could de Beauv. ch. 63. p. 323. But that regulation removed the evil and a fingle flep. For the party who suspected that a witness was about to depose in a manner unfavourable to his cause, might accuse him of being fuborned, give him the lie, and challenge him to combat; if the witness was vanquished in battle, no other evidence was admitted, and the party by whom he was fummoned to appear lost his cause. Leg. Baivar. tit. 16. § 2. Leg. Burgund. tit. 45. Beauman. ch. 61. p. 315. The reason given for obliging a witness to accept of a desiance, and to defend himself by combat, is remarkable, and contains the fame idea which is fill the foundation of what is called the point of honour; " for it is just, that that if any one affirms that he perfectly knows the truth of any thing, and offers to give oath upon it, that he should not helitate to maintain the veracity of his affirmation in combat." Leg. Burgund. tit. 45.

THAT the trial by judicial combat was established in every country of Europe, is a fact well known, and requires no proof. That this mode of decision was frequent, appears not only from the codes of ancient laws which established it, but from the carliest writers concerning the practice with the different nations of Research. They treat of this culture a great length; they conserve the regulations concerning it will minute accuracy; and explain them with much folicitude. It made a capital and extensive article in jurisprudence. There is not any one subject in their system of law which Beaumanoir, Defontaines, or the compilers of the Affises de Jerusalem seem to have considered as of greater importance; and none on which they have bestowed fo much attention. The fame observation will hold with respect to the early authors of other nations. It appears from Madox, that trials of this kind were to frequent in England, that fines, paid on these occasions, made no inconsiderable branch of the King's revenue. Hist of the Excheq. vol. i. p. 349. A very curious account of a judicial combat between Mesire Robert de Beaumanoir, and Mesire Pierre Tournemine, in presence of the duke of Bretagne, A. D. 1385, is published by Morice Mem. pour fervir de preuves à l'hist. de Bretagne, tom. ii. p. 498. All the formalities observed in such extraordinary proceedings are there described more minutely, than in any ancient monument which I have had an opportunity of confidering. Tournemine was accused by Beaumanoir of having murdered his brother.

The former was vanquished, but was faved from being hanged upon the spot, by the generous intercession of his antagonish. A good account of the origin of the last concerning judicial conbat, is published in the history of Pavia, by Bernardo Sacci, lib. 12.2. 8. in Grav. Thes. Antiqu. Italf vol. iii, 743.

This made of trial was to acceptable, that ecclerations, notwithstanding the prohibitions of the church, were constrained not only to connive at the practice, but to authorize it. A remarkable inflance of the produced by Pasquier the herebes. lib. iv. ch. i. p. 350 abbot Wittikindus, have produced in the mote, confidered the determination point in law by combat, as the best and most honorance mode of decilion. In the year 078, a judicial combat was fought in the presence of the Emperor Henry. The archieflop Aldebert advised him to terminate a contest which had arisen between two noblemen of his court, by this mode of decision. The vanquished combatant, though a serion of high rank, was beheaded on the spot. Chronic. Ditmarin Episc. Mersb., chez Bouquet Recucil des Hift. tom. x. p. 121. Questions concerning the property of churches and monasteries, were decided by combat. In the year of, a controverly concerning the church of St. Medard, whether it belonged to the abbey of Beattien, was terminated by judicial combat. Bouquet Recueil des Hist. tom. ix. Ibid. p. 612, &c. The Emperor Henry I. declares, p. 729. that his law authorifing the practice of judicial combats, was enacted with consent and applause of many faithful bishops. lbid. p. 231. So remarkably did the martial ideas of those ages prevail over the genius and maxims of the canon law, which in other inflances had fuch credit and authority with ccclefiafticks. A judicial combat was appointed in Spain, by Charles V. A. D. 1522. The combatants fought in the Emperor's presence. Vol. I. Q_q and and the battle was conducted with all the rites prescribed by the ancient laws of chivalry. The whole transaction is described at great length by Pontus Lysterus Rev. Austriac. lib. viii. c. 17. p. 205.

THE last instance which occurs in the history of Brance, of a judicial combat authorised by the magistrate, was the famous one between M. Jarnac and M. de la Chaistaignerie, A. D. 1347. A trial by combat was appointed in England, A. D. 1571, under the infrection of the judges in the course of semmon pleas; and though 2000 not carried to the farm a remity with the for-mer Count Elizabeth having interpole her authority, and enjoined the parties to compound the mafter, yet in order to preserve their honour, the lists were marked out, and all the forms previous to the combat were observed with much cere-Spelm. Gloff. voc. Campus, p. 103. In the year mony. 1631. a judicial combat was appointed between Donald Lord Rea, and David Ramsay, Esq; by the authority of the Lord high Constable, and Earl Marthal of England; but that quarrel likewise terminated without bloodshed, being accommodated by Charles I. Another instance occurs seven years later. Rushworth in Observations on the Statutes, &cc. p. 266.

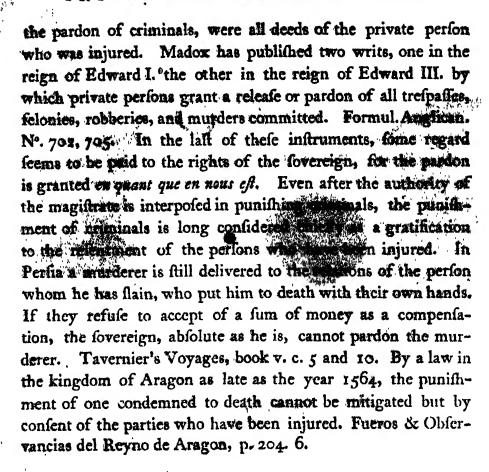

NOTE XXIII. SECT. I. p. 62. [Z]

THE text contains the great outlines which mark the course of private and public jurisdiction in the several nations of Europe. I shall here follow more minutely the various steps of this progress, as the matter is curious and important enough to merit this attention. The payment of a fine by way of satisfaction to the person or family injured, was the first device of a rude people, in order to check the career of private resentment, and to extinguish those saids, or deadly seeds which were profecuted among them with the utmost violence. This cashon may be traced back to the ancient Germans. Tacit. de Morib. Ger. c. 21. and prevailed among other encivilized nations. Many examples of this are collected by the ingenious and learne ed author of Historical Law-Tracks, vol. a. p. 41. Thele fines were afcertained and levied in three different manners. At first they were fettled by voluntary agreement between the parties at variance. When their rage began to subside, and they felt the bad effects of their quality in enmity, they came to terms of coacord, and the little coast made was called a coast firm, inplying that it was by mutual consent. Loix, lib. xxx. c. at is apparent from fome of the space ancient codes of laws, that when these were compiled matters fill remained in that simple state. In certain cases, the person who had committed an offence was left exposed to the resentment of those whom he had injured, until he should recover their favour, quoquo modo potuerit. Lex-Frision. tit. 11. § 1. The next mode of levying these fines was by the sentence of arbiters. An arbiter is called in the Regiam majestatem amicabilis compositor. lib. 11. c. 4. $ 10. He could estimate the degree of offence with more impartiality than the parties interested, and determine with greater equity what satisfaction ought to be demanded. It is difficult to bring an authentic proof of a custom previous to the records preserved in any nation of Europe. But one of the Formulæ Andegavenses compiled in the fixth century, feems to allude to a transaction carried on not by the authority of a judge, but by the mediation of arbiters. Bouquet Recueil des Histor. tom. iv. p. 566. But as an arbiter wanted authority to enforce his decisions, judges were appointed with compulfive power to oblige both parties to acquicsce in their decisions. Previous to this last flep, the expedient of paying compositions was an imperfect Q q 2 remedy

quarians have taken the word in a different sense. De l'Esprit des Loix, liv. xxx. c. 20, &c. The great object of judges was to compel the one party to give, and the other to accept the fatisfaction prescribed. They multiplied regulations to this purpole, and enforced them by grievous penalties. Leg. Longob. lib: i. tit. 9 § 34. Ib. tit. 37. § 1, 2. Capitul. 196. i. p. 371. § 22. The person who received a composition was obliged to cease from all farther hostility, and to confirm his reconciliation with the adverse metallic an oath. Leg. Longob lib. i. tit. 9. § 8. As an additional more permanent evidence of reconciliation, he was accompanies grant a bond of second as the permanent evidence of t fon from whom he served a composition, absolute them all farther profecution. Marculfus and the other collectors of ancient writs have preserved several different forms of such bonds. Marc. lib. 11. § 18. append. § 23. Form. Sirmondicæ. § 39. The Letters of Slanes, known in the law of Scotlands. are perfectly fimilar to these bonds of security. By the letters of Slanes, the hoirs and relations of a person who had been murdered, bound themselves, in consideration of an Assythment or composition paid to them, to forgive, pass over, and forever for get, and in oblivion interr all rancout, malice, revenge, prejudice, grudge and refentment, that they have or may conceive against the aggressor or his posterity, for the exime which he had committed, and discharge him of all action, civil or criminal, against him or his estate, for now and ever. System of Stiles by Dallas of St. Martin's, p. 862. In the ancient form of letters of Slanes, the private party not only forgives and forgets, but pardons and grants remission of the crime. This practice, Dallas, reasoning according to the principles of his own age, confiders as an encroachment on the rights of fovereignty, as none, fays he, could pardon a criminal but the king. Ibid. But in early and rude times, the profecution, the punishment, and the Ir, after all the engagements to cease from enmity, which I have mentioned, any person renewed hostilities, and was guilty of any violence, either towards the person from whom he had received a composition, or towards his relations and heirs, this was deemed a most heinous crime, and punished with extraordinary rigour. It was an act of direct rebellion against the authority of the magistrate, and was repressed by the interposition of all his power. Leg. Longob. lib. i. tit. 9. § 8, 34. Capit. vol. i. p. 371. § 22. Thus the avenging of injuries was taken out of private hands, a legal composition was established, and peace and amity were restored under the impection, and by the authority of a judge. It is evident, that at the time when the barbarians settled in the provinces of the Roman Empire, they had fixed judges established among them with compulfive authority. Perfons vested with this character are mentioned by the earliest historians Du Cange, voc. Judices. The right of territorial jurisdiction was not altogether an usurpation of the feudal barons. There is good realon to believe that the powerful leaders who seized different districts of the countries which discussed and kept possession of them as allosial property difficulty at the same time the right of jurisdiction, and carries within their own territories. This jurisdiction was was and extended to all causes. The clearest proofs of this are produced by M. Bouquet. Le Droit publique de France eclairci; &c. tom. i. p. 206, &c. The privilege of judging his own vasfals, appears to have been originally a right inherent in every baron who held a fief. As far back as the archives of nations can conduct us with any certainty, we find the jurisdiction and fief united. One of the earliest charters to a layman which I have met with, is that of Ludovicus Pius, A. D. 814. And it contains the right of territorial jurisdiction, in the most express and extensive terms. Capitul. vol. ii. p. 1405. There are many charters to churches and monasteries of a more early date, containing grants of finilar jurisdiction, and prohibiting any royal judge to enter the territories of those churches or monasterics, or to perform any act of judicial authority there. Bouquet. Recueil. des Hist. tom. iv. p. 628, 631, 633. tom. v. p. 703, 710, 752, 762. Muratori has published many very ancient charters containing the fame immunities. Antiq. Ital. Differt. lxx. In most of these deeds, the exacting of Freda is particularly prohibited, which shews that they constituted a valuable part of the publick revenue at that juncture. The expence of obtaining a fentence

in a court of justice during the middle ages was so considerable, that this circumstance alone was sufficient to render men unwilling to decide any contest in judicial form. It appears from a charter in the thirteenth century, that the baron who had the right of justice, received the fifth part of the value of every fubject, the property of which was tried and determined in his court. If, after the commencement of a law fuit, the parties terminated the contest in an amicable manner, or by arbitration, they were nevertheless bound to pay the fifth part of the subject contested to the court before which the fuit had been brought. Hift, de Dauphine. General 1722 com. i. p. 22. Similar to this is a regulation in the characteristic granted to the town of Friburg, A. D. 1120. If two of the citizens shall quarrel, and if one of them shall complain to the superior Lord or to his judge, and after commencing the fuit shall be privately reconciled to his adversary; the judge, if he does not approve of this reconciliation, may compel him to infift in his law-suit; and all who were present at the reconciliation shall forfeit the fayour of the superior Lord. Historia Zaringo Badensis. Auctor. Jo. Dan. Schoepflinus. Carolfr. 1765. 4to. vol. v. p. 55.

What was the extent of that jurisdiction which those who held siefs possessed originally, we cannot now determine with certainty. It is evident that, during the disorders which prevailed in every kingdom of Europe, the great vassals took advantage of the seebleness of their Monarchs, and enlarged their jurisdictions to the utmost. As early as the tenth century, the more powerful barons had usurped the right of deciding all causes, whether civil or criminal. They had acquired the High Justice as well as the Low. Establ. de St. Louis, lib. i. c. 24, 25. Their sentences were final, and there lay no appeal from them to any superior court. Several striking instances of this are collected by Bruffel. Traité des Fiefs, liv. iii. c. 11, 12, 13. Not fatisfied with this, the more potent barons got their territories erected into Regalities, with almost every royal pretogative and jurisdiction. Instances of these were frequent in France. Bruff. ib. In Scotland, where the power of the feudal nobles became exothitant, they were very numerous. Historical Law Tracts, vol. i. tract. vi. Even in England, though the authority of the Norman Kings circumscribed the jurisdiction of the berons more than any feudal kingdom, legeral counties palatine were assaud, are which the King's judges could not enter, and no west state come in the King's name, until it received the fear was county palatine. Spelman. Gloff. voc. Comites Palatini; Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England, vol. iii. p. 78. These lords of regalities had a right to claim or refeue their vassals from the King's judges, if they affumed any jurisdiction over them. Bruffel ubi supra. In the law of Scotland this privilege was termed the right of repledying; and the frequency of it not only interrupted the course of justice, but gave rise to great disorders in the exercise of it. Hist. Law Tracts, ib. The jurisdiction of the counties palatine was productive of like inconveniencies in England.

THE remedies provided by Princes against the bad effects of these usurpations were various, and gradually applied. Under Charlemagne and his immediate descendants, the regal prerogative still retained great vigour, and the Duces, Comites, and Missi Dominici, the former of whom were ordinary and fixed studges, the latter extraordinary and itinerant judges, in the different provinces of their extensive dominions, exercises a jurisdiction co-ordinate with the barons in some cases, and surprise to L. I.

perior to them in others. Du Cange voc. Dux, Comites & Miss. Murat. Antiq. Dissert. viii. & ix. But under the feeble race of Monarchs who succeeded them, the authority of the royal judges declined, and the barons usurped that unlimited jurisdiction which has been described. Louis VI. of France attempted to revive the function of the Missi Dominici under the title of Juges des Exempts, but the barons were become too powerful to bear such an encroachment on their jurisdiction, and he was obliged to desift from employing the Henaut. Abregé Chron. tom, i. p. 730. His successione (as her been observed) had recourse to expedients less alarmine. The appeal de defaute de Droit, or on account of the refuse printice, was the first which was attended with any considerable effect. According to the maxims of feudal law, if a baron had not as manyvassals as enabled him to try by their peers, the parties who offered to plead in his court, or if he delayed or refused to proceed in the trial, the cause might be carried, by appeal, to the court of the superior lord of whom the baron held, and tried. there. De l'Esprit des Loix, liv. xxviii. c. 28. Du Cange voc. defectus Justitia. The number of Peers or affesfors in the courts of Barons was frequently very confiderable. It appears from a criminal trial in the court of the viscount de Lautrec, A. D. 1290, that upwards of two hundred persons were present; and affished in the trial, and voted in passing judgment. Langued. par D. D. De Vic & Vaisette, tom. iv. Preuves, p. 114. As the right of jurisdiction had been usurped by many inconfiderable barons, they were often unable to hold courts. This gave frequent occasion to such appeals, and rendered the practice familiar. By degrees, such appeals began to be taken from the courts of the more powerful barons, and it is evident, and dignity of their courts of justice. It was the ancient custom for the feudal monarchs to preside themselves in their courts, and to administer justice in person. Marculf. lib. i. § 25. Murat. Dissert. xxxi. Charlemagne, whilst he was dressing, used to call parties into his presence, and having heard and confidered the subject of litigation, gave judgment concerning it. Eginhartus vita Caroli magni cited by Madox Hift. of Exchequer, vol. i. p. or. This could not fail of rendering their courts respectable. St. Louis, who moved to the utmost the practice of appeals, revived the encient cultom, and administered suffice in person with all the meent simplicity. " I have often seen the saint," says jointale, " sit under the shade of an oak in the wood of Vincennes, when all who had any complaint, freely approached him. At other times he gave orders to spread a carpet in a garden, and feating himfelf upon it, heard the causes that were brought before him." Hist. de St. Louis, p. 13. edit. 1761. Princes of inferior rank, who possessed the right of inflice, sometimes dispensed it in person, and presided in their tribunals. Two instances of this occur with respect to the Dauphines of Vienne. Hist. de Dauphine, tom. i. p. 18. tom. ii. p. 257. But as Kings and Princes could not decide every cause in person, nor bring them all to be determined in the same court; they appointed Baillis, with a right of jurisdiction, in different districts of their kingdom. These possessed powers somewhat similar to those of the ancient Comites. It was towards the end of the twelfth century, and beginning of the thirteenth, that this office was first instituted in France. Brussel, liv. ii. c. 35. When the King had a court established in disserent quarters of his dominions, this invited his subjects to have recourse to it. It was the private interest terest of the Baillis, as well as an object of publick policy, to extend their jurisdiction. They took advantage of every defect in the rights of the barons, and of every error in their. proceedings, to remove causes out of their courts, and to bring them under their own cognizance. There was a distinction in the feudal law, and an extremely ancient one, between the high justice and the low. Capitul. 3. A. D. 812. § 4. A. D. 815. § 3. Establ. de St. Louis, liv. i. c. 40. Many barons posfessed the latter prisident who had no title to the former. The former included the right trying crimes of every kind, even the highest; the letter was confined to petry trespasses. This. furnished endless secrets for obstructing, restraining and reviewing the proceedings in the baron courts. Ordon. ii. 457. $ 25, 458, $ 29, --- A regulation of greater importance fucceeded the inflitution of Baillis. The King's fupreme court or parliament was rendered fixed as to the place, and constant as to the time of its meetings. In France, as well as in the other feudal kingdoms, the King's court of justice was originally ambulatory, followed the person of the monarch, and was held only during some of the great festivals. Philip Augustus, A. D. 1305. rendered it fedentary at Paris, and continued its terms. during the greater part of the year. Pasquier Recherches, liv. ii. c. 2 and 3, &c. Ordon. tom. i. p. 366. § 62. He and his fucceffors vefted extensive powers in that court; they granted the members of it feveral privileges and distinctions which it would be tedious to enumerate. Pasquier, ib. Velly hist. de France, tom. vii. p. 307. Persons eminent for integrity and. skill in law were appointed judges there. Ib. By degrees the final decision of all causes of importance was brought into the parliament of Paris, and the other parliaments which adminifired justice in the King's name, in different provinces of the kingdom.

from

Rr2

This jurisdiction, however, the parliament of Paris acquired very flowly, and the great vaffals of the crown made violent efforts in order to obstruct the attempts of this parliament to extend its authority. Towards the close of the thirteenth century, Philip the Fair was obliged to prohibit his parliament from taking cognisance of certain appeals brought into it from the courts of the Count of Bretagne, and to recognise his right of supreme and final jurisdiction. Memoires pour servir de Preuves à l'Histoire de Bretagne par Morice, tom. i. p. 1037. 1074. Charles VI. at the end of the following century was obliged to confirm the rights of the Dukes of lineague in more ample form. Ibid. tom. ii. p. 580, 381, 30 violent was the opposition of the barons to this right of appeal which they confidered as fatal to their privileges and power, that the authors of the Encyclopedic have mentioned several instances in which barons put to death, or mutilated, or conficated the goods of fuch as ventured to appeal from the fentences pronounced in their courts, to the parliament of Paris, tom. xii. Art. Parlement, p. 25.

The progress of jurisdiction in the other seudal kingdoms was in a great measure similar to that which we have traced in France. In England, the territorial jurisdiction of the barons was both ancient and extensive. Leg. Edw. Conf. N° 5 and 9. After the Norman conquest it became more strictly seudal; and it is evident from facts recorded in the English history, as well as from the institution of counties Palatine, which I have already mentioned, that the usurpations of the nobles in England were not inferior to those of their contemporaries on the continent. The same expedients were employed to circumscribe or abolish those dangerous jurisdictions. William the Conqueror established a constant court in the hall of his palace; from which the four courts now entrusted with the administration of justice in England took their rise. Henry II. divided his kingdom into six circuits, and sent itinerant judges to hold their courts in them at stated seasons. Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England, vol. iii. 57. Justices of peace were appointed in every county by subsequent monarchs; to whose jurisdiction the people gradually had recourse in many civil causes. The privileges of the Counties Palatine were gradually limited; with respect to some points they were abolished; and the administration of justice was brought into the King's courts, or before judges of his appointment. The several steps taken for this purpose are enumerated in Dalrymple's History of Feudal Property, chap. vii.

blished

In Scotland the usurpations of the nobility were more exorbitant than in any other feudal kingdom. The progress of their encroachments, and the methods taken by the crown to limit or abolish their territorial and independant jurisdictions, both which I had occasion to consider and explain in a former work, differed very little from those of which I have now given the detail. History of Scotland, vol. i. p. 45.

I SHOULD perplex myself and my readers in the labyrinth of German jurisprudence, were I to attempt to delineate the progress of jurisdiction in the Empire, with a minute accuracy. It is sufficient to observe, that the authority which the Aulick council and Imperial chamber now posses, took its rise from the same abuse of territorial jurisdiction, and was acquired in the same manner that the royal courts attained influence in other countries. All the important facts with respect to both these particu-

Hars, may be found in Phil. Datt. de pace publica Imperii, lib. iv. The capital articles are pointed out in Pfeffel Abregé de l'Histoire & Droit publique d'Allemagne, p. 556, 581; and in Traité du Droit publique de l'Empire par M. le Coq. de Villeray. Both the two last treatises are of great authority, having been composed under the eye of M. Schoepslin of Strasburgh, one of the ablest publick lawyers in Germany.

NOTE XXIV. SECT. L. p. 65 [AA]

IT is not easy to fix with precision the precise at which Ecclefirafticks first began to claim exemption from the civil jurisdiction. It is certain, that during the early and pureft ages of the church, they pretended to no such immunity. The authority of the civit magistrate extended to all persons, and to all causes. 'This fact has not only been clearly established by Protestant authors, but is admitted by many Roman Catholicks of eminence, and particularly by the writers in defence of the liberties of the Gal-There are feveral original papers published by lican church. Muratori, which shew that in the ninth and tenth centuries, causes of the greatest importance relating to ecclesiasticks were ftill determined by civil judges. Antiq. Ital. vol. v. Differt. lxx. Ecclefiaflicks did not shake off all at once their subjection to civil courts. This privilege, like their other usurpations, was gained flowly, and step by step. This exemption seems at first to have been merely an act of complaifance, flowing from veneration for their character. Thus from a charter of Charlemagne in favour of the church of Mans, A.D. 796, to which M. l'Abbe de Foy refers in his Notice de Diplomes, tom. i. p. 201, that monarch 6 directs directs his judges, if any difference should arise between the administrators of the revenues of that church and any person whatever, not to summon the administrators to appear in mallo publico; but first of all to meet with them, and to endeavour to accommodate the difference in an amicable manner. This indulgence was in process of time improved into legal exemption; which was founded on the fame superstitions respect of the laity for the clerical character and function. A remarkable instance of this occurs in a charter of Frederick Barbaroffa, A. D. 1172, to the mountery we Altenburg. He grants them judicium non tantura fanguirolentis plaga, sed vita & mortis; he prohibits any of the reval judges from diffurbing their jurifdiction; and the reason which he gives for this ample concession is, nam quorum, ex Dei gratia, ratione divini ministerii onus leve est, & jugum suave; nos penitus nolumus illius oppressionis contumelia, vel manu Laica fatigari, Mencken. Script. rer. Germ, vol. iii. p. 1067.

It is not necessary for illustrating what is contained in the text, that I should describe the manner in which the code of the canon law was compiled, and shew that the doctrines in it most favourable to the power of the clergy, are founded on ignorance, or supported by fraud and forgery. The reader will find a full account of these in Gerard. Van Mastricht, Historia Juris Ecclesiastici, & in Science de Government par M. Real, tom. vii. c. 1. & 3. § 2, 3, &c. The history of the progress and extent of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, with an account of the arts which the clergy employed in order to draw causes of every kind into the spiritual courts, is no less curious, and would throw great light upon many of the customs and institutions of the dark ages; but it is likewise foreign from the present subject. Du Cange in his Glossary, voc. Curia Christianitatis, has collected most of the causes with respect to which the clergy arrogated an exclusive jurisdiction, and refers to the authors, or original papers, which confirm his observations. Giannonè in his Civil History of Naples, lib. xix. § 3. has ranged these under proper heads, and ferutinizes the pretentions of the church with his usual boldness and discomment. M. Fleury observes, that the clergy multiplied, at such a rate, the pretexts for extending the authority of the spiritual courts, that it was in their power to withdraw every person and every cause from the jurisdiction of the civil Hist. Eccles. tom. xix. Disc. Prelim. 16. But how magistrate. ill founded soever the jurisdiction of the clergy may be, or whatever might be the abuses to which their manner of exercising it gave rife, the principles and forms of their jurisprudence were far more perfect than that which was known in the civil courts. It is probable that ecclefiaftics never fubmitted, during any period of the middle ages, to the laws contained in the codes of the barbarous nations, but were governed entirely by the Roman law. They regulated all their transactions by such of its maxims as were preferved by tradition, or were contained in the Theodosian code, and other books extant among them. This we learn from a custom which prevailed universally in those ages. Every person was permitted to chuse among the various codes of laws then in force, that to which he was willing to conform. In any transaction of importance, it was usual for the persons contracting to mention the law to which they fubmitted, that it might be known how any controversy that should arise between them was to be decided. Innumerable proofs of this occur in the charters of the middle ages. But the clergy confidered it as fuch a valuable privilege of their order to be governed by the Roman

314

Roman law, that when any person entered into holy orders, it was usual for him to renounce the laws to which he had been formerly subject, and to declare that he now submitted to the Roman law. Constat me Johannem clericum filium quondam Verandi, qui professus sum, ex natione mea, lege vivere Langobardorum, sed tamen, pro honore ecclesiastico, lege nanc videor vivere Romana. Charta A. D. 1072. Farulsus presbyter qui professus sum, more sacerdotii mei, lege vivere Romana. Charta, A. D. 1075. Muratori intichita Estensi. vol. i. p. 78.

THE code of the canon law began to be compiled early in the ninth century. Mem. de l'Acad. des Inscript. tom. xviii. p. 346, &c. It was above two centuries after that before any collection was made of those customs, which were the rule of judgment in the courts of the barons. Spiritual judges decided, of course, according to written and known laws; Lay judges, left without any fixed guide, were directed by loofe traditionary customs. But besides this general advantage of the canon law, its forms and principles were more confonant to reason, and more favourable to the equitable decision of every point in controversy, than those which prevailed in lay courts. It appears from Notes XXI. and XXII. concerning private wars, and the trial by combat, that the whole spirit of ecclesiastical jurisprudence was adverse to these sanguinary customs which were destructive of justice; and the whole force of ecclesiastical authority was exerted to abolish them, and to substitute trials by law and evidence in their room. Almost all the forms in lay courts which contribute to establish, and continue to preserve order in judicial proceedings, are borrowed from the canon law. Fleury Inftit. du droit canon. part iii. c. 6. p. 52. St. Louis in his Establisse-

Sf2

mens

mens confirms many of his new regulations concerning property, and the administration of justice, by the authority of the canon law, from which he borrowed them. Thus, for instance, the first hint of attaching moveables for the recovery of a debt, was taken from the canon law. Establ. liv. ii. c. 21 and 40. And likewise the cessio bonorum, by a person who was insolvent. In the fame manner, he established new regulations with respect to the effects of persons dying intestate, liv. i. c. 89. These and many other salutary regulations, the Canonists borrowed from the Roman law. Many other examples might be produced of more perfect jurisprudence in the canon law than was known in lay courts. For that reason it was deemed an high privilege to be subject to ecclesiastical invisibilition. Among the many immunities, by which men were alluded to engage in the dangerous expeditions for the recovery of the Holy Land, one of the most considerable was the declaring those who took the Cross to be subject only to the spiritual courts. See Note XIII. and Du Cange, voc. crucis privilegia.

NOTE XXV. SECT. I. p. 67. [BB]

THE rapidity with which the knowledge and study of the Roman law spread over Europe, is amazing. The copy of the Pandects was found at Amalphi, A. D. 1137. Irnerius opened a college of civil law at Bologne a few years after. Giann. Hist. book xi. c. 2. It began to be taught as a part of academical learning in different parts of France before the middle of the century. Vaccarius gave lectures on the civil law at Oxford as early as the year 1147. A regular system of seudal law, formed plainly in imitation of the Roman code, was composed by two Milanese lawyers about the year 1150. Gratian published the code of canon law, with large additions and emendations, about the same time. The earliest collection of these customs. which served as the rules of decision in the courts of justice, is the Assistance of the ferusalem. They were compiled, as the preamble informs us, in the year 1099, and are called Jus Confuetudinarium quo regebatur regnum orientale. Willerm. Tyr. lib. xix. 2. But peculiar circumstances were the occasion of this early compilation. The victorious Crusaders settled as a colony in a foreign country, and adventurers from all the different nations of Europe composed this new society. It was neceffary on that account to afcertain the laws and customs which were to regulate the transactions of business, and the administration of justice among hem. But there was at that time no collection of cultoms, and no attempt to render law fixed in any country of Europe. The first undertaking of that kind was by Glanville, Lord Chief Junice of England, in his Tractatus de Legibus & Confuetudinibus Anglia, composed about the year 1181. The Regiam Majestatem in Scotland, ascribed to David I. feems to be an imitation, and a fervile one of Glan-Pierre de Fontaines, who tells us that he was the first who had attempted fuch a work in France, composed his Confeil, which contains an account of the customs of the country of Vermandois, in the reign of St. Louis, which began, A. D. 1226. Beaumanoir, the author of the Constumes de Beauvoisis, lived about the fame time. The Establishmens of St. Louis, containing a large collection of the customs which prevailed within the royal domains, were published by the authority of that monarch. As foon as men became acquainted with the advantages of having written customs and laws to which they could have recourse on every occasion, the method of collecting them them became common. Charles VII. of France, by an ordonance, A. D. 1453. appointed the customary laws in every province of France to be collected and arranged. Velly and Villaret. Histoire, tom. xvi. p. 113. His successor, Louis Xl. renewed the injunction. But this falutary undertaking hath never been fully executed, and the French jurisprudence remains more obfeure and uncertain than if these prudent regulations of their monarchs had taken effect. A practice was effablished in the middle ages, which affords the clearest proof that judges while they had no other rule to direct their decress but unwritten and traditionary customs, were often at a loss how to find out the facts and principles, according to which they were bound to decide. They were obliged in dubious cases to call a certain number of old men, and to lay the case before them, that they might inform them what was the practice or custom with regard to the point. This was called Enquefic par tourbe. Du Cange, voc. Turba. The effects of the revival of the Roman jurisprudence have been explained by M. de Montesquieu, liv. xxviii. c. 42. and by Mr. Hume, Hist. of England, vol. ii. p. 441. I have adopted many of their ideas. Who can pretend to review any fubject which fuch writers have confidered, without receiving from them light and information? At the same time I am convinced that the knowledge of the Roman law was not fo entirely lost in Europe during the middle ages, as is commonly believed. My subject does not require me to examine this point. Many striking facts with regard to it are collected by Donato Antonio D'Asti Dall' Uso e autorita della ragione civilè nelle provincie dell' Imperio Occidentale. Nap. 1751. 2 vol. 8vo.

THAT the civil law is intimately connected with the municipal juriforudence in feveral countries of Europe, is a fact to well known, that it needs no illustration. Even in England, where the Common law is supposed to form a system perfectly distinct from the Roman code, and although those who apply in that country to the study of the Common law boast, with affectation, of this distinction, it is evident that many of the ideas and maxims of the civil law are incorporated into the English jurisprudence. This is well illustrated by the ingenious and learned author of Observations on the Statutes, chiefly the more ancient. 2d. edit. 66.

NOTE XXVI. SECT. I. p. 69. [CC].

THE whole history of the middle ages makes it evident that war was the fole profession of gentlemen, and the only subject attended to in their education. Even after some change in manners began to take place, and the civil arts of life had acquired some reputation, the ancient ideas with respect to the accomplishments necessary for a person of noble birth, continued long in force. In the Memoires de Fleuranges, p. 9, &c. we have an account of the youthful-exercises and occupations of Francis I. and they are altogether martial and athletic. That father of letters owed his relish for them, not to education, but to his own good fense, and good taste. The manners of the superior order of ecclesiastics during the middle ages, furnish . the strongest proof that the distinction of professions was scarce known in Europe. The functions and character of the clergy are obviously very different from those of laymen; and among the inferior orders of churchmen, this constituted a dislinet character, separate from that of their citizens. But the dignified ecclefiaftics, who were frequently of noble birth, were above fuch a diffinction; they retained the idea of what belonged to them as gendemen, and in spite of the decrees of Popes, or the the canons of councils, they bore arms, led their vaffals to the field, and fought at their head in battle. Among them the pricithood was fearee a feparate profession; the military accomplishments which they thought essential to them as gentlemen, were cultivated; the theological science, and pacific virtues suitable to their spiritual function, were neglected and despised.

As foon as the science of law became a laborious study, and the practice of it a separate protession, such as rose to eminence in it obtained honours formerly appropriated to foldiers. Knighthood was the most illustrious mark of distinction during several ages, and conferred privileges to which rank or birth alone were not entitled. To this high dignity persons eminent for their knowledge of law were advanced, and by that, were placed on a level with those whom their military talents had rendered conspicuous. Miles Juffitie, Miles Literatus became common titles. Matthew Paris mentions such knights as early as A. D. 1251. If a judge attained a certain rank in the courts of justice, that alone gave him a right to the honour of knighthood. Pasquier Récherches, liv. 11. c. 16. p. 130. tations historiques sur la Chevalerie par Honorè de Sainte Marie, p. 164, &c. A profession which led to offices that enobled a fuch as held them, grew into credit, and the people of Europe became accustomed to see men rise to eminence by civil as well as military talents.

NOTE XXVII. SECT. I. p. 72. [DD.]

THE chief intention of these notes, was to bring at once under the view of my readers, such facts and circumstances as tend to illustrate or confirm what is contained in that part of the history to which they refer. When these lay scattered in many different authors, and were taken from books not generally known, or which it would be disagreeable to consult, I thought it would be of advantage to collect them together. But when every thing necessary for the proof or illustration of my narrative or reasonings may be found in any one book which is generally known, or deserves to be so, I shall satisfy myself with referring to it. This is the case with respect to Chivalry. Almost every fact which I have mentioned in the text, together with many other curious and instructive particulars, concerning this singular instruction, may be found in Memoires for l'ancienne Chevaleite considerée comme un establissement politique & militaire, par Mr. de la Curne de St. Palaye.

NOTE XXVIII. SECT. III. p. 76. [EF].

THE subject of my enquiries does not call me to write a history of the progress of science. The facts and observations which I have produced are sufficient to illustrate the effects of its progress upon manners and the state of society. While science was altogether extinct in the western parts of Europe, it was cultivated in Constantinople and other parts of the Grecian Empire. But the fubtile genius of the Greeks turned almost entirely to theological disputation. The Latins borrowed that spirit from them, and many of the controversies which fill occupy, and divide theologians, took their rife among the Cooths, from whom the other Furopeans derived a confiderable process their knowledge. See the terlimony of Eneas Sylvius and the interde antiq. academicis, p. 43. Histoire literaire de le a de bance de la constant vii. p. 113, &c. tom. ix. p. 151, &c. Soon after the Prophe of the Caliphs was established in the East, some illustrates prints ces arofe among them, who encouraged feience. But when the Arabians turned their attention to the literature cultivated by the ancient Greeks and Romans, the chafte and correct taffe Their works of genius appeared higid and unanimated to a Vor. L T t prople people of a more warm imagination. It was impossible for them to admire the poets and historians of Athens, or of Rome. But they were fenfible of the merit of their philosophers. The operations of the intellect are more fixed and uniform than those of the fancy or taste. Truth makes an impression nearly the same in every place; the ideas of what is beautiful, elegant, or fublime, vary in different climates. The Arabians, though they neglected Homer, translated the most eminent of the Greek. philosophers into their gwn language; and, guided by their precepts and discoveries, applied themselves with great ardour tothe fludy of geometry, aftronomy, medicine, dialectics and metaphysics. In the three former they made considerable and useful improvements, which have contributed not a little to advance those sciences to that high degree of perfection which they have attained. In the two latter, they chose Aristotle for their guide, and refining on the libtle and distinguishing spirit which characterizes his philosophy, they rendered it altogether frivolous or unintelligible. The schools established in the East for teaching and cultivating these sciences, were in high repu-They communicated their love of science to their countrymen, who conquered Afia and Spain; and the schools instinited there were little inferior in fame to those in the East. Many of the persons who distinguished themselves by their proficiency in science in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, were educated among the Arabians. Bruckerus collects many inftances of this, Histor. Philos. v. iii. p. 681, &c. Almost all the men eminent for science during several centuries, were instructed in the sciences by the Arabians. The first knowledge of the Aristotelian philosophy in the middle ages, was acquired by translations of his works out of the Arabick. The Arabian commentators were deemed the most skilful and nuthentic ~ guides in the fludy of his fystem. Conring. antiq. acad. Diff. iii.

p. 95, &c. Supplem. p. 241, &c. Murat. antiquit. Ital. vol. in p. 932, &cc. From them the Schoolmen derived the genius and principles of their philosophy, which contributed so much to retard the progress of true science.

THE establishment of Colleges or Universities is a remarkable zera in literary history. The schools in cathedrals and monasteries confined themselves chiefly to the teaching of grammar. There were only one or swo mafters employed in that office. But in colleges, profiliors were appointed to teach all the different parts of science. The time that ought to be allotted to the fludy of each was accertained. A regular form of trying the proficiency of students was prescribed; and academical titles and honours were conferred on fuch as acquitted themselves with approbation. A good account of the origin and nature of these is given by Seb. Bacmeisterus. Antiquitates Rostochienses, five, Historia Urbis & Academia Rostoch. ap. Monumenta inedita Rer. Germ. per E.]. de Westphalen, vol. iii. p. 781. Lips. 1743. The first obscure mention of these academical degrees in the University of Paris, (from which the other universities in Europe have borrowed most of their customs and institutions) occurs, A. D. 1215. Crevier hist. de l'univ. de Paris, tom. i. p. 296, &c. They were completely established, A. D. 1231. Ib. 248. It is unnecessary to enumerate the feveral privileges to which batchelors, mafters, and doctors were entitled. One circumstance is sufficient to demonstrate the high degree of estimation in which they were held. Doctors in the different faculties contended with knights for the precedence, and the dispute was terminated in many instances by advancing the former to the dignity of knighthood, the high prerogatives of which I have mentioned. It was even afferted, that a doctor had a right to that title without creation. Barolus laught doctorem actualiter regentem in jure civili per Tt2

decennium

decennium essici militem ipso facto. Honorè de St. Marie Disfert. p. 165. This was called Chevalerie de lectures, and the perions advanced to that dignity, milites Clerici. These new establishments for education, together with the extraordinary honours conferred on learned men, greatly encreased the number of scholars. In the year 1262, there were ten thousand students in the university of Bologna; and it appears from the history of that university, that law was the only science taught in it at that time. In the year 1340, there were thirty thoufand in the university Oxford. Speed's Chron. ap. Anderfon's Chronol. Deduction of Commerce, vol. p. 172. In the fame century, ten thousand persons wored in a question agitated in the university of Paris; and as graduates alone were admitted to that privilege, the number of fludents must have been vastly great. Velly Hist. de France, tom. xi. p. 147. There were indeed few universities in Europe at that time; but such a number of students may nevertheless be produced as a proof of the extraordinary ardour with which men turned to the fludy of science in those ages; it shows likewise that they already began to confider other professions than that of a soldier as lannourable and useful.

NOTE XXIX. SECT. III. p. 82. [FF].

The great variety of subjects which I have endeavoured to illustrate, and the extent of this upon which I now enter, will suffiry my adopting the words of M. de Montesquieu, when he begins to treat of commerce. "The subject which follows would require to be discussed more at large; but the nature of this work does not permit it. I wish to glide on a tran"quil stream; but I am hurried along by a torrent."

MANY proofs occur in history of the little intercourse between nations during the middle ages. Towards the close of the tenth century, Count Bouchard intending to found a monastery at St. Maur des Fosses, near Paris, applied to an abbot of Clugny in Burgundy, famous for his fanctity, intreating him to conduct the monks thither. The language in which he addressed that holy man is lingular: He tells him, that he had undertaken the labour of such a great journey; that he was datigued with the length of it, therefore hered to obtain his request, and that his journey into such a distant country should not be in vain. The answer of the about is fill more extraordinary: He refused to comply with his defice it would be extremely fatiguing to go along with him in a litrange and unknown region. Burchardi venerabiles Comins ap. Boughet Rec. des Hift. vol. x. Even so late as the beginning of the twelsth century, the monks of Ferrieres in the dioceie of Sens did not know that there was such a city as Tournay in Flanders; and the monks of St. Martin of Tournay weere equally unacquainted with the A transaction in which they were both fituation of Ferrieres. concerned, made it necessary for them to have some intercourse. The mutual interest of both monasteries prompted each to find & After a long fearch, which is out the fituation of the other. particularly described, the discovery was made by accident. Herimannus Abbas de Restauratione St. Martini Tornacensis ap. Dacher. Spicel. vol. xii. p. 400. The ignorance of the middle ages with respect to the situation and geography of remote countries was still more remarkable. The most ancient geographical chart which now remains as a monument of the state of that science in Europe during the middle ages, is found in a manufeript of the Chronique de St. Denys. There the three parts of the earth then known are to reprefented, that Jerusalem is placed in the middle of the globe, and Alexandria appears to be as near to it as Nazareth. Mem. de l'Acad. des Belles Lettres, tom. xvi. p. 185. There feem to have been no inns or houses of entertainment for the reception of travellers during the mid-Murat. Antiq. Ital. vol. iii. p. 581, &c. proof of the little intercourse which took place between different Among people whose manners are simple; and who nations. are seldom visited by strangers, hospitality is a virtue of the first rank. This duty of hospitality was so necessary in that flate of fociety which wook place during the middle ages, that it was not confidered as one of those virtues which men may practife or not, according to the temper of their minds, and the generofity of their hearts. Hospitality was enforced by statutes, and those who neglected this duty were liable to punishment. Quicumque hospiti vettienti lectum, aut focum negaverit, trium selidorum inlatione musietur, Leg. Burgund. tit. xxxviii. § 1. Si quis homini aliquo pergenti in itinere mansionem vetaverit sexaginta folidos componat in publico. Capitul. lib. vir § 82. This increase of the penalty, at a period so long after that in which the laws of the Burgundians were published, and when the state of society was much improved, is very remarkable. Other laws of the same purport are collected by Jo. Fred. Polac Systema Jurisprud. Germanicæ, Lips. 1733. p. 75. The laws of the Slavi were more rigorous than any that he mentions; they ordained, "that the moveables of an inhospitable person should be confiscated, and his house burnt. They were even so follicitous for the entertainment of strangers, that they permitted the landlord to steal for the support of his guest." Quod noctu furatus fueris, cras appone, hospitibus. Rerum Mecleburgicar. lib. viii. a Mat. Jo. Beehr. Lips. 1751. p. 50. In confequence of these laws, or of that state of society which made it proper to enact them, hospitality abounded while the intercourse. among men was inconfiderable, and fecured the stranger a kind reception reception under every roof where he chose to take shelter. This, too, proves clearly, that the intercourse among men was rare, for as soon as this increased, what was a pleasure became burden, and the entertaining of travellers was converted into a branch of commerce.

But the laws of the middle ages afford a proof still more convincing of the finall intercourse between different nations. The genius of the Feudal fystem, as well as the spirit of realousy which always accompanies ignorance joined in discouraging strangers from settling in any country. If a person removed from one province in a kingdom to another, he was bound within a year and a de acknowledge himself the vallal of the baron in whose estate he settled; if he neglected to do so, he became liable to a penelty; and if at his death he neglected to leave a certain legacy to the baron within whose territories he refided, all his goods were confifcated. The hardships imposed on foreigners fettling in a ftrange country, were still more intole-In more early times, the superior ford of any territory in which a foreigner fettled, might feize his person, and reduce him to fervitude. Very striking instances of this occur in the history of the middle ages. The cruel depredations of the Normans in the ninth century, obliged many inhabitants of the maritime provinces of France to fly into the interior parts of the kingdom. * But inflead of being received with that humanity to which their wretched condition entitled them, they were reduced to a flate of fervitude. Both the civil and ecclefiaftical powers found it neceflary to interpofe, in order to put a flop to this barbarous practice. Potgieffer. de Statu Servor. lib. i. c. 1. § 16. In other countries, the laws permitted the inhabitants of the maritime provinces to reduce fuch as were shipwrecked on their coast to servitude Ibid. § 17. This barbarous custom prevailed in other countries.

347

countries of Europe. The practice of seizing the goods of perfons who had been shipwreeked, and of confidenting as the property of the lord on whose manor they were thrown, seems to have been universal. De Westphalen Monum, inedita Rer. Germ. vol. iv. p. 907, &c. et Du Cange, voc. Laganum, Beehre Rer. Mecleb. lib. p. 512. Among the ancient Welfly three forts of persons, a madman, a stranger, and a leper, might be killed with impunity. Leges Hoel Dda, quoted in Observat. on the Statutes, chiefly the more ancient, p. 22. M. de Lauriere produces several ancient deeds which prove that in different provinces of France, firangers became the lages of the lord on Gloffaire du Droit Francois, Art. whose lands they fettled. Aubaine, p. 92. Beaumanoir says, there are several places in France, in which if a stranger fixes his residence for a year and day, he becomes the flave of the lord of the manor. Couft. de Beauv. ch. 45. p. 254. But as a precice fo contrary to humanity could not subsist, the superior levels found it necessary to rest satisfied with levying certain annual taxes from aliens, imposing upon them some extraordinary duties or services. But when any stranger died, he could not convey his effects by a will; and all his real as well as personal estate fell to the King, or to the lord of the barony, to the exclusion of his natural heirs. This is termed an France Droit d'Aubaine. Pref. de Lauvier, Ordon. * tom. i. p. 15. Bruffel. tom. ii. p. 944. Du Clage, voc. Albani. Pasquier Recherches, p. 367. This practice of confiscating the reffects of firangers upon their death was very ancient. It is mentioned, though very obscurely, in a law of Charlemagne, A. D. 813. Capitul. Baluz. p. 507. § 5. Not only perfons who were born in a foreign country were subject to the Droit d'Auhaine, but even such as removed from one diocese to another, or from the lands of one baron to another. Brussel. vol. ii.

p. 947, 949. It is scarce possible to conceive any law more unfavourable to the intercourse between nation. Something similar to it, however, may be found in the ancient laws of every kingdom in Europe. With respect to Italy, see Muran Ant. vol. ii. p. 14. It is no small difference to the French jurishing dence that this barbarous, inhospitable custom, should still remain in a nation so highly civilized.

THE confusion and outrage which abounded unger a feeble form of government, incepable of framing or executing Martery laws, rendered the communication between the different provinces of the farie kindson extremely dangerous. It appears from a letter of Lapus, to Ferrieres, in the ninth century, that the highest man burth infested by banditti, that it was necessary for expellers at them them throughout companies or caravans, that there will be take from the assaults of robbers.
Bouquet Recuestices and will via 515. The numerous legulations published by Charles the Bald in the fame controls diffover the frequency of those disorders; and such acts of violence were become to common west the many they were hardly conferdered as criminal; and for this reason the inferior judges called Centenarii were required to take an outly that they would neither commit any robbery themselves, nor protect such as were guilty of that crime. Capitul. edit. Baluz. vol. fr. p. 63, 68. The historians of the ninth and tenth centuries give pathetic descriptions of these disorders. Some remarkable passages to. this purpose are collected by Mat. Jo. Beehr Rer. Mecletia, lib. viii. p. 603. They became so frequent and audacious, that the authority of the civil magistrate was unable to repress them. The ecclesiastical jurisdiction was called in to aid it. Councils were held with great folemnity; the bodies of the faints were brought thither, and in presence of their sacred Vol. I. $\mathbf{U}_{\mathbf{u}}$ icliquis, reliques, anathemas were denounced against robbers, and other violators of the publick peace. Bouquet Recueil des Hist. tom.x. p. 360, 431, 536. One of these forms of excommunication isfued A. D. 988, is still preserved, and is so singular, and composed with eloquence of such a peculiar kind, that it will not perhaps appear unworthy of a place here. After the third in troduction, and mentioning the outrage which the secution to the sauthema, it runs thus; Obtenebreicant occuli section qui compriverunt; arefcant manus, que rapugunt; debilitentur omitia membra, que adjuverbrit. Comper la rile, men requiem inveniatis, fructuque vettri laboriterivemini. Formidetis, & paveatis, à facie persequentis, contra le contratis hossis, ut tabekendo deficiatis. Sit portio vestra de finditore Domini, in terra mortis et tenshgarum; desse cordis stelles ad fatisfac-tionem plenam convergentur. I college a vobis hæ malidictiones, scelerum vestrorum persentationes diametricum permanentis in peccato pervasionis. Amen. Ess. 112. Bouquet. Ib. D. 517.

With respect to the prefere of commerce which I have deficibed, p. 78, acc it may be offered that the Italian states carried on some commerce with the cities of the Greek empire, as early as the age of Charlemagne, and imported into their own country the rich commodities of the east. Murat. Antiq. Ital. vol. ii. p. 882. In the tenth century, the Venetians had opened a trade with Alexandria in Egypt. Ibid. The inhabitants of Amalphi and Pisa had likewise extended their trade to the same ports. Murat. Ib. p. 884, 885. The effects of the Crusades in increasing the wealth and commerce of the Italian states, and particularly that which they carried on with the East, I have explained page 29th of this volume. They not only imported the Indian commodities from the East, but established manufactures of curious fabric in their own country.

country. Several of these are enumerated by Muratori in his Differtations concerning the arts and the weaving of the middle ages. Antiq. Ital. vol. ii. p. 349, 399. They made great progress, particularly in the manufacture of filk, which had long been peculiar to the eaftern provinces of Asia, Silk stuffs were of fuch him price in ancient Rome, that only a few persons of the first rank where able to purchase them. Under Aunclian, A. D. 270, a possid of till was equal in value to a great of gold. Ablit ut also fila minlentur, Libra enimauri tens libra ferici fut. Vopiland Aureliand Justiman, in the fixth contrary, introduced the artor resemble worms into Greece, which rese dered the commodity jongs the more plentiful, though full it was of fuch great store is a state of a story or magnificence, referved only for parties of the full order, or for publick folemnities. Roger A diposed Sinits about the year 1,230, carried off a number of a linear in the filk trade from Athens, and fettling them in Palettno, introduced the culture of hik into his kingdom, from which it was communicated to other parts of Italy. Gianon. Hift. of Maples, b. xi. c. 7. This feems to have rendered filk to common that about the middle of the fourteenth century, a thousand citizens of Genoa appeared in one procession clad in filk robes. Sugar is likewise a production of the East. Some plants of the fugar cane were brought from Asia; and the first attempt to cultivate them in Sicilo was made about the middle of the twelfth century. From thence they were transplanted into the southern provinces of Spain. From Spain they were carried to the Canary and Madeira illes, and at length into the new world. Ludovico Guicciardini, in cnumerating the goods imported into Antwerp, about the year 1560, mentions the fugar which they received from Spain and Portugal as a confiderable article. He describes that as the pro-U u 2

";

duct of the Madeira and Canary islands. Descritt. de Paesi Bassi, p. 180, 181. The sugar cane was either not introduced into the West-Indies at that time, or the cultivation of it was not to considerable as to surnish an article in commerce. In the middle ages, though sugar was not raised in such quantities, a composite of for so many purposes, as to become one of the common necessaries of life, it appears to have been a considerable article in the immerce of the Italian states.

THESE various commodities with which the galians furnished the other nations of Europe, procured them a avourable recep-They were established in France in the tion in every kingdom. thirteenth century with most extended than the They not only obtained every indulgence furourable to their commerce, but personal rights and privileges are a stated to them, which the natives of the kingdom did not to Ordon. tom. iv. p. 668. Dy a special proviso, they were exempted from the droit d'aubaine. Ibid. p. 670. As the Londonds engroffed the trade of every kingdom in which they lettled they became masters of its cash. Money of course was in their hands not only a fign of the value of their commodities, but become an object of commerce itself. They dealt largely as bankers. in medicance, A. D. 1295, we find them stiled mercatures and campfores. They carried on this as well as other branches of their commerce with formewhat of that rapacious spirit which is natural to monopolizers, who are not restrained by the concurrence of rivals. An abfurd opinion, which prevailed in the middle abes, was, however, in some measure, the cause of their exorbitant demands, and may be pleaded in apology for them. Commerce carried be carried on with advantage unless the perfons who lend a fum are allowed a certain premium for the ule of their money, and as a compensation for the risk which they run in permitting another to traffick with their stock. This premium is fixed by law in all commercial countries, and is called the legal interest of money. But the Fathers of the church prepofterously applied the prohibitions of usury in scripture to the payment of legal interest, and condemned it as a sin. The Choolings milled by Aristotle, whose sentiments they followed implicitly, without examination adopted the same error. and enforced it. Blackstone's Commentaries on the laws of England, vol. ii. p. 45%. Thus the Lombards four themfelves engaged traffick which was deemed criminal and odious. They were limbe to punishment if detected. They were not fatisfied, therefore with that moderate premium, which there is a claimed if their trade had been open and dubbased by the They exacted a fum proportional to the danger are utany of a discovery. Accordingly, we find the same dust for them to demand thenty per cent for the use of money in the thirteenth-century. Murat. Antic Ital vol i p. 803. About the beginning of that century, the Counters of Flanders was obliged to borrow money in order to pay ther in band's ranfom. She procured the fum requisite, either from Italian merchants or from Jews. The lowest interest which she waid to them was above twenty per cent. and some of them exacted near thirty. Martene and Durand. Thefaur. Anecdotorum. vol. i. p. 886. In. the fourteenth century, A. D. 1311, Philip IV. fixed the interest which might be legally exacted in the fairs of Champaghe at twenty per cent. Ordonan. tom. i. p. 484. The interest of money in Aragon was somewhat lower. James I. A. D. 1942, fixed it by law at eighteen per cent. Petr. de Marca. Marca five Limes Ilispan. app. 1433. As late as the year 1490, it appears that the

the interest of money in Placentia, was at the rate of forty per This is the more extraordinary, because at that time the commerce of the Italian States was become confiderable. Memorie Storiche de Piacenza, tom. viii. p. 104. Piac. 1760. It appears from Lud. Guicciardini, that Charles V. had fixed the rate of interest in his dominions in the Low Countries at twelve per cent, and at the time when he wrote about the year 1560, was not uncommon to exact more than that fim. He complaints of this as exorbitant, and points out its bad effects both on agriculture and commerce. Descritt. die efi Bassi, p. 172. . This high interest of money, is alone a proof that the profits on commerce were exorbitant. Liombards were likewife established in England, in the thirty-and a confiderable street in the city of Louison Hill bears their name. They emoyed great privileges, and carried on an extensive commerce, particularly as bankers. Amerion's Chronol. Deduction, vol i. p. 137, 160, 204, 231, where the flatutes or other authorities which confirm this are quoted. But the chief mart for Italian commodities was at Bruges. Navigation was then so impersed, that a voyage between the Baltick and Mediterranean could not performed in one fummer. reason a magazine or storehouse half way between the commercial cities in the north, and those in Italy became necessary. Bruges was pitched upon as the most convenient station. That choice introduced vast wealth into the Low-Countries. Bruges was at once the staple for English wool; for the woollen and linea manufactures of the Netherlands; for the naval stores, and other bulky commodities of the north; and for the Indian as well as domestick productions imported by the valian States. The extent of its commerce in Indian goods with with Venice alone appears from one fact. In the year 1318, five Venetian galeasses laden with Indian commodities arrived at Bruges, in order to dispose of their cargoes at the fair. L. Guic. Descritt. di Paesi Bassi, p. 174. Galeasses were vessels of very considerable burden. It was the greatest emporium in all Europe. Many proofs of this occur in the historians and records of the distreenth and fourteenth centuries. But inflead of multiplying quotations. I shall refer my readers to anderson, vol. i. p. 12, 137, 213, 246, Sec. The nature of the work prevents one from entering into any long details, but there are some detached falls, which give an high idea of the wealth both of the Flemiss and tomas commercial states. The Duke of Brabant controlled in court heer to the Black Prince, fon of Edward III. of England, 1339, and gave her a portion which would amount to three hundred thouland pounds of our present money. Rysis anders, vol. v. p. 113. John Caleazzo Visconti Duke of Milan concluded a meaty of marriage between his daughter and Lionel Duke of Clarence Edward's third fon. A. D. 1307. and granted her a portion equal to two hundred thousand pounds of our present money. Rymer Fæder: vol. vi. p. 547. These exorbitant sums to far exceeding where was then granted by the most powerful monarchs, and which appear extraordinary even in the present age, when the wealth of Europe is so much increased, must have arisen from the riches which flowed into these countries from their extensive The first source of wealth to the and lucrative commerce. towns fituated on the Baltick fea, feems to have been the herring-lithery; the shoals of herring frequenting at that time the coasts of Sweden and Denmark, in the same manner is now refort to the British coasts. The effects of this fishery are thus described by an author of the thirteenth century. The Danes, says he, who were formerly clad in the poor garb of sailors, are now cloathed in scarlet, purple and sine linen. For they abound with wealth flowing from their annual sistery on the coast of Schonen; so that all nations resort to them, bringing their gold, silver and precious commodities, that they may purchase herrings, which the divine bound bestows upon them. Arnoldus Lubecensis ap. Conring. de Urbib. German.

THE Hanseatick league is the most powerful commercial confederacy known in history. Its origin towards the close of the twelfth century, and the objects of its union, are described by Knipscildt Tractatus Historico Politico Juridicus de Juribus Civitat. Imper. lib. i. cap. 4. Andersan has mentioned the chief facts with respect to their commercial progress, the extent of the privileges which they obtained in different countries, their successful wars with several monarchs, as well as the spirit and zeal with which they contended for those liberties and rights without which it is impossible to carry on commerce to advantage. The vigorous efforts of a society attentive only to commercial objects, could not fail of diffusing over Europe new and more liberal ideas concerning justice and order wherever they settled.

In England the progress of commerce was extremely flow; and the causes of this are obvious. During the Saxon heptarchy, England, split into many petty kingdoms, which were perpetually variance with each other, exposed to the fierce incursions of the Dancs, and other northern pirates, and funk in barbarity and ignorance, was in no condition to cultivate commerce, or to purfue any system of useful and salutary policy. When a better prospect began to open by the union of the kingdom under one monarch, the Norman conquest took place. This commend figh a violent shock, and such a sudden and total revolutional property that the nation did not recover from it during limenst migns. By the time that the conflictution began to acquire force stability, and the English and fo incorporated with their conquerors at to become one people, the nation engages with no less ardour than imprudence in support of their menancial assentions to the crown of France, and long walked as recent and penins in its wild efforts to conquer that and repeated disappointments, a see at the state of this fatal frenzy. and the nation her water in enjoy tome repore, had leitte to breathering as garner new thrength, the destructive ware between the license of little and Ismealter broke out, and involved the kingebra at the world of all calamities. Thus, befides the company observations of companies occasioned by the nature of the feudal government, and the liste of manners during the middle ages, its progress in keepland was retarded by peculiar causes. Such a succession of events acverte to the commercial spirit was sufficient to have checked its growth. although every other circumstance had favoured it. The English were accordingly one of the last nations in Europe who availed themselves of their natural commercial advantages. Before the reign of Edward III. all the wool of England, except a fmall quantity wrought into coarse cloths for home consumption, was fold to the Flemings or Lombards, and manufactured X xVol. L . by by them. Though Edward, A. D. 1326, began to allure some of the Flemish weavers to settle in England, it was long before the English were capable of fabricating cloth for foreign markets, and the export of unwrought wool still continued to be the chief article of their commerce. Anderson patterns. foreign commodities were brought into England by the Lombard or Hanseatick merchants. The English ports were frequented by thips both from the north work outh of Europe, and they tamely allowed foreigners to reap all the profits arising from the supply of their wants. The firmmercial treaty of England on record, is that with Haruin wing of Norway, A. D. 1217. Anders. vol. i. p. 108. But they did not venture to trade in their own ships to the Ballet werd the beginning of the fourteenth century. Ib. 171. The middle of the fifteenth before they fent any thip into the Mediterraneau. Ib. p. 177. Nor was it long before this period that their veffels visited the ports of Spain or Portugal. Bur though I have pointed out the flow progress of the English commerce, as a fact little attended to, and yet meriting confideration; the concourse of foreigners to the parts of England, together with the communication among an the different countries in Europe, which went on increasing from the beginning of the twelfth century, is sufficient to justify all the observations and reasonings in the text concerning the influence of commerce on the state of manners, and of fociety.

the

NOTE XXX. SECT. III. p. 153.

I HAVE not been able to discover the precise manner in which the Justiza was appointed. Among the claims of the the junta or union formed against James I. A. D. 1264, this was one; that the King should not nominate any person to be Justiza without the confent or approbation of the ricos-hombres or nobles. Zurita Anales de Aragon, vol. i. p. 180. But the established by immemorial practice, and was conformable to the laws of the kingdom, that the King, in virtue of his royal prerogative, named the Justiza. Zurita, Ibid. 181. Blanca, 656. From another pallage in Lurita, it appears that while Aragonese enjoyed privilege of the union, i. e. the power of confederating as their lovereign as often as they conceived that he had violated any of their rights and immunities, the Justiza was not only prominated by the King, but held his office during his picature. New was this practice attended with any bad effects, as the privilege of the union was a fufficient and effectual check to sur soule of the royal prerogative. But when the privilege of the union was abolished as dangerous to the order and peace of fociety, it was agreed that the Justiza should continue in office during life. Several Kings, however, attempted to remove the Justizer who were obnoxious to them, and they formetimes succeeded in the attempt. In order to guard against this encroachment, which would have destroyed the intention of the institution, and have rendered the Justine the dependant and tool of the crown, instead of the guardian of the people, a law was enacted in the Cortes, A. D. 1442, ordaining that the Justiza should continue in office during life, and should not be removed from it unless by the authority of the Cortes. Fueros & Observancial del Reyno de Arag. lib. i. p. 22. By former laws the person of the Justiza had been declared facred, and he was responsible only to the Cortes. Ibid. p. 15. b. Zurita and Blanca, who both published their histo-X x 2 ries.

ries while the Justiza of Aragon retained the full exercise of his privileges and jurisdiction, have neglected to explain several circumstances with regard to the office of that respectable magistrate, because they addressed their works to their countrymen. who were well acquainted with every particular concerning the functions of a judge to whom they looked up as to the wordian of their liberties. It is vain to confult the later historians of Spain about any point, with respect to which the excellent historians whom I have named are filent. The ancient constitution of their country was overturned, and desperan established on the ruin of its liberties, when the writers of his and the preceding century composed their billions, and on that account they had little curiofity to know the nature of those institutions to which their ancestors owed the enjoyment of freedom, or they were afraid to describe them with much accuracy. with which Mariana, his continuator Miniana, and Ferreras, write their histories, is very different from that of the two historians of Aragon, from whom I have taken my account of the conflication of that kingdom.

Two circumstances concerning the Justiza, besides those which I have mentioned in the text, are worthy of observation, 1. More of the ricos-hombres, or noblemen of the first order, could be appointed Justiza. He was taken out of the second class or cavalleros, who answer nearly to gentlemen or commoners in Great Britain. Fueros & Observanc. del Reyno, &c. lib. 1. p. 21. b. The reason was. By the laws of Aragon, the ricos-hombres were not subject to capital punishment; but as it was necessary for the security of liberty, that the Justiza should be accountable for the manner in which he executed the high trust reposed in him, it was a powerful restraint upon him to know that he was liable to be punished with the utmost rigour. Blanca, p. 657, 756. Zurita, tom. ii. 229. Fueros & Observanc. lib. ix. p. 182. b. 183. It appears too from many passages in Zurita, that the Justiza was appointed to check the dominating and oppositive spirit of the nobles, as well as to set bounds to the power of the monarch, and therefore he was chosen from an order of citizens equally interested in opposing both.

- 2. A MAGISTREE pollefied of such vast powers as the Justiza, might have selled them in a manner pernicious to the state, if he himself had the subject to no controul. A constitutional remeay, havered was provided against this danger. Seventeen perfors were chosen by for in each meeting of the Cortes. These seemed a tribunal called the court of inquisition into the office of Julius. This court met at three flated terms in each year. Every person had liberty of companions to it of any iniquity or neglect of duty in the Justica, or in the inferior judges, who afted in his name. The Justize and his de-puties were called to answer for their conduct. The members of the court passed sentence by ballow. They might punish by degradation, confiscation of goods, or even with death. The law which erected this court, and regulated the forms of its procedure, was enacted A. D. 1461. Zurita Anales, iv. 102. Blanca Comment. Rer. Aragon. 770. Previous to this period, inquiry was made into the conduct of the Justiza, though not with the same formality. He was from the first institution of the office subject to the review of the Cortes. The constant dread of fuch an impartial and fevere inquiry into his behaviour, was a powerful motive to the vigilant and faithful difcharge charge of his duty. A remarkable instance of the authority of the Justiza when opposed to that of the King, occurs in the year 1386. By the constitution of Aragon, the eldest son or heir apparent of the crown possessed considerable power and jurisdiction in the kingdom. Fueros & Observant de Roman de Arag. lib. i. p. ... Peter IV. instigated by a feeling wife, attempted to deprive his fon of this, and enjoined me tubjects to yield him no obedience. The Prince immediately applied to the Justiza; " the safe-guard and defence lays Zurita, against all violence and oppression." The Justiza granted him the firmo de derecho, the effect of which was, that up his giving furety to appear in judgment, he could not be deprived of any immunity or privilege, which he possessed but in consequence of a legal trial before the Justiza, and of a fentione pronounced by This was published throughout the landom, and notwithstanding the proclamation in contradiction to this which had been iffeed by the King, the Prince continued in the exercife of all his rights, and his authority was universally recog-Zurita Anales de Aragon, tom, il. 365. nized.

NOTE XXXI. SECT. III, p. 154.

I HAVE been induced, by the concurring testimony of many respectable authors, to mention this as the constitutional form of the eath of allegiance, which the Aragoncse swore to their Sovereigns. I must acknowledge, however, that I have not found this singular oath in any Spanish author whom I have had an opportunity to consult. It is mentioned neither by Zurita, nor Blanca, nor Argensola, nor Sayas, who were all historiographers appointed by the Cortes of Aragon to record the transactions of the kingdom. All these writers possess a merit, which is very rare among historians. They are extremely accurate in tracing the progress of the laws and constitution of their country. Their silence with respect to this, creates some suspicion the genuineness of the oath. But as it is mentioned by the many authors, who produce the ancient Spanish words in which a suppressed, it is probable that they have taken it from some writer of credit, whose works have not fallen into my hands. The spirit of the oath is perfectly agreeable to the genius of the Aragonese constitution.

THE privilege of Union which I mentioned in the preceding note, and alluded to in the next, is indeed one of the most singular which could take place in a regular government, and the oath that I have mentioned expresses nothing more than this conflitutional privilege entitled the Aragonele to perform. If the King or his ministers violated any of the laws or immunities of the Aragonese, and did not grant immediate redress in consequence of their representations and remonstrances, the nobles of the first rank, or Ricos-hombres thatura, & de mefnada, the equelirian order, or the nobility of the fecond class, called Hidalgos & Infanciones, together with the magistrates of cines, might either in the cortes, or in a voluntary affembly, join in union and hinding themselves by mutual oaths and the exchange of hostages to be faithful to each other, they might require the King, in the name and by the authority of his body corporate, to grant them redrefs. If the King refused to comply with their request, or took arms in order to oppose them, they might, in virtue of the privilege of union, infantly withdraw their allegiance from the King, refuse to acknowledge him as their Sovereign, and proceed to elect another Monarch; nor did they incur apy guilt, guilt, or become liable to any profecution on that account. Blanca Com. Rer. Arag. 661, 669. This union did not refemble the confederacies in other feudal kingdoms. It was a conflitutional affociation, which pretended to legal arising which iffued its mandates under a common feel, and in all its operations by regular and approximed in dangerous right was not only claimed, but exercised. In the year 1287, the Aragonese formed an union in opposition Alfonfo Ill and obliged the King not only to comply with their demands, but to ratify a privilege to the power of the crown. Zurita Anales, fom 1. p. 32. In the year 1347. an union was formed against Peter I with equal luccels, and a new ratification of the privilege was expected. Zurita, tom. ii. p. 202. But foon after, the King living defeated the leaders of the union in battle, the privilege of union was finally abrogated in the Cortes, and all the laws or records which contained any confirmation of it, were cancelled or defreyed. The King, in presence of the Cortes, called for the act whereby he had ratified the union, and having wounded his hand with les poiniard, he held it above the record, "I hat privilege, tays he, " which has been to tatal to the kingdom, and fo injurious to " royalty, thould be effaced with the blood of a King." Zurita icm, ii. p. 229. The law abolishing the union is published. Fueros & Observanc. lib. ix. p. 178. From that period the Justiza became the constitutional guardian of publick liberty, and his power and jurisdiction occasioned none of those violent convulsions which the tumultuary privilege of the union was apt to produce. The constitution of Aragon, however, still remained extremely free. One source of this liberty was from the early admission of the representatives of cities into the Cortes.

Cortes. It seems probable, from Zurita, that burgesses were constituent members of the Cortes from its first institution. He mentions a meeting of Cortes, A. D. 1133, in which the procuradores de las ciudades y villas were present. Tom. i. p. 51. The econstitutional language in which their presence is declared to the Cortes, after the journals of that court were regularly kings. It is probable that an historian fo accurate as Learnts, would not have used these words, if he had not taken them from some authentick record. It was more than a century after this period before the representatives of cities formed a constituent part is the supreme allemblies of the other European nations. The free pirit of the Aragonele government is confpicuous in many particulars. The Unites not only opposed the attempts of their kings to increase their revenue, or to extend their prerogative, but they claimed rights and exercised powers which will appear extraordinary even in a country accustomed to the enjoyment of liberty. In the year 1286, the Cortes claimed the privilege of naming the members of the King's council and the officers of his houthold, and they feem to have obtained it for four time. Zurita, tom. i. p. 303, 307. It was the privilege of the Cortes to many the officers who commanded the troops raifed by their authority. This feems to be evident from a passage in Zurita. When the Cortes, in the year 1503, raifed a body of troops to be employed in Italy, it paffed an act empowering the King to name the officers who thould command them, Zurita, tom. v. p. 274; which plainly implies that without this warrant, it did not belong to him in virtue of his prerogative. In the Fueros & Observancias del reyno de Aragon, two general declarations of the rights and privileges of the Aragonese are published; the one in the reign of Vol. I. Yy Pedro Pedro I. A. D. 1283, the other in that of James II. A. D. 1325. They are of fuch length, that I cannot insert them, but it is evident from these, that not only the privileges of the nobility, but the rights of the people, personal as well as political, were, at that period, more extensive, and better under the in any kingdom in Europe. Lib. i. p. 7, 9. which the King bound himself to observe those right and liberties of the people, was very folema. Thid, p. 14. b. & p. 14. The Cortes of Aragon, discovered not only the jealousy and vigilance, which are peculiar to free flates, in guarding the effential parts of the conflictution, but they were icrupulously attentive to observe the most minute forms and ceremonies to which they were accustomed. According to the established laws and customs of Aragon, no foreigner had liberty to enter the hall in which the Cortes affembled. Fordinand, in the year 1.181, appointed his Queen, Habella, regent of the kingdom, while he was absent during the course of the campaign. Inc law required that a regent thould take the oath of fidelity in presence of the Cortes; but as liabella was a fereigner, before the could be admitted, the Cortes thought at necessary to pass an act authorizing the ferjeant-porter to open the door of the hall, and to allow her to enter : 6 fo attentive were they, fays Zurita to " observe their laws and forms, even such as may seem and "mirrute." Tom. iv. p. 313.

THE Aragonese were no less solicitous to secure the personal rights of individuals, than to maintain the freedom of the constitution; and the spirit of their statutes with respect to both was equally liberal. Two facts relative to this matter merit observation. By an express statute in the year 1325, it was declared declared to be unlawful to put any native Aragonese to the torture. If he could not be convicted by the testimony of witnesses, he was instantly absolved. Zurita, tom. ii. p. 66. Zurita recould the regulation with the satisfaction natural to an historian, which is countrymen the compasses the laws of Aragon to those of Rome, as both excessed citizens and freemen from such ignominious and cruel the timent, and said recourse to it only in the trial of slaves. Zurita had reason to bestow such an encomium of the laws of his country. Torque was at that time permitted by the laws of every other nation in Europe. Even in England, from which the mild spirit of legislation has long bandhed it, torture was not, at that time, unknown. Collegeans on the Statutes, thiefly the more anticat. See, p. 66.

THE other fact mows, that the tame forst which influenced the legislature provided among the people. In the year 1485, the religious zeal of Fereinasii and liabella prompted them to introduce the inquisition into Aragon. Phough the Aragonele were 10 less Tuperstitions with attached than the other Spaniards to the Roman Cathorick faith, and no less defigous to root out the leeds of error and of herefy which the Jews and Woors had leastered, yet the, took arms against the inquisitors, murdered the bief inquisitor, and long opposed the establishment of that tribunal. The reason which they gave for their conduct was, That the mode of trial in the inquisition was inconsistent with liberty. The criminal was not confronted with the witnesses, he was not acquainted with what they deposed against him, he was subjected to torture, and the goods of persons condemned were Zurita Anales, tom. iv. p. 341. confiscated.

The form of government in the kingdom of Valencia, and principality of Catalonia, which were annexed to the crown of Aragon, was likewise extremely favourable to liberty. The Valencians enjoyed the privilege of union in the same management with the Aragonese. But they had no magistrate much the Justiza. The Catalonians were no less jene that the two other nations, and no less jene that it is not necessary for illustrating the following history in enter into any farther detail concerning the peculiarities in the constitution of these kindsoms.

NOTE XXXII. SECT. III. P. 155.

I HAVE fearched in vain among the historians of Castile for fuch information as might enable me to trace the progress of laws and government in Callie, or to explain the nature of the conflitution with the fame degree of accuracy wherewith I have deferred the notifical flate of Aragon, At is manifest not only from the historians of Castile, but from its ancient laws, particularly the Fuero Juzgo, that its moreoche, were originally elective. Ley 2 . They were chosen by the bishops, the nobility, and the people, ibid. It appears from the same venerable pode of laws that the prerogative of the Castilian monarchs was extremely limited. Villaldiego, in his commentary on these laws, produces many facts and authorities in confirmation of both these particulars. Dr. Geddes, who was well acquainted with Spanish literature, complains that he could find no author, who gave a distinct account of the Cortes or supreme affembly of the nation, or who described the manner in which it was held, or mentioned the precise number of members who had a right to fit in it. He produces, however, from Gil Gonzales d'Avila, who published a history of Henry II, the writ of summons to the town of Abula, requiring it to chuse representatives to appear in the Cortes which he called to meet A. D. 1590. From this we learn, that Prelates, Dukes, Marthe mafters of the three military orders, Conde's and These composed to attend. These composed the because of excelenations and nobles, which formed two members The cities which feat members to that meeting of the Cortes were forey eight. The number of representatives, (for the cities had right to citile more or fewer according to their respective dignity) amounted to an hundred and twenty-five. Geddes Misbellaneous Tracts, vol. i. 331. Zurita having occasion to mention the Cortes which Ferdinand held at Took . Des 1005, in order to fecure to himfelf the government of Castile after the death of Isabella. records, with he will accurate, the names of the members present, and of the cities which they represented. From that lift it appears, that only eighteen cities and deputies in this affenting. Anales de Aragon, tem, vi ... What marthe occafion of this great insupplies in the number of cries represented in these two meetings of the Cortes, I am workle to explain.

NOTE XXXIII. SECT. III. p. 157.

A GREAT part of the territory in Spain was engroffed by the nobility. L. Marinæus Siculus, who composed his treatise de Rebus Hispaniæ during the reign of Charles V. gives a catalogue of the Spanish nobility, together with the yearly rent of their estates. According to his account, which he affirms was as accurate as the nature of the subject would admit, the sum total of the annual revenue of their lands amounted to one million four hundred and eighty two thousand ducats. If we make allowance for the vast difference in the value of money in the fifteenth century from that which bears, and confider that the catalogue of Marinague only the Titulades, or nobility whole families were different guished by some honorary title, their wealth must appear very great. L. Marinaus ap. Schotti Scriptores Hilpan. vol. i. p. 323. The Commons of Caltile in their contests with the crown, which I thall hereafter relate, complain of the extenfive property of the nobility as extremely pernicious to the kingdom. In one of their manifesto's they affert that from Valladolid to St. Jago in Galicia, which was an hundred leagues, the crown did not polleds more than three villages. All the rest belonged to the poblity, and could be subjected to no publick burden. Sandov, Vida del Emperor, Carl. V. vol. i. p. 422. It appears from the tellimony of authors quoted by Boyadilla that their val policitions were bellowed upon the Ricos-bombies, hidalgor, and cavalleros by the Kings of Castile, in reward for the allifance, which they had received from them in expelling the Moors. They likewife obtained by the fame means a confiderable influence in the cities, many of which anciesty depended upon the nobility. Politica para Corregidores. Amb. 1750. fol. vol. i. 440, 442.

NOTE XXXIV. SECT. III. p. 160.

I HAVE been able to discover nothing certain, as I observed Note XVIII. with respect to the origin of communities or free cities in Spain. It is probable, that as soon as these were recovered vered from the Moors, the inhabitants who fixed their refidence in them being persons of distinction and credit, had all the privileges of municipal government and jurifdiction conferred upon them. Many striking proofs occur of the splendour, waste and power of the Spanish cities. Hieronymus Paulus description of Barcelona in the year 1491, and comthe dimensions of the town to that of Naples, and the regance of its buildings, the variety of its manufactures, and the extent of its commerce to Florence, Hieron Paulus ap. Scottum. Script. Hisp. ii. 844. Marinans describes Toledo as a large and populous city. A great number of its inhabitants were persons of quality and of Mustrious rank. Its commerce was great. It applied particularly to the manufactures of filk and wool; and the number of inhabitants employed in these two branches of trade amounted nearly to ten thousand. Marin. ubi fupr. p. 302. I know no say, fays he, that I would prefer to Valladelid for ergunor and splendour bid p. 312. We may form forme ellimete of its populoused from the following circumstances. The cirizens took arms in the year 1516, in order to oppose a menture concerted by cardinal Ximenes, and they mustered in the city, and in the territory which belonged to it thirty thousand fighting men. Sandov. Vida del Emper. Carl. V. tom. i. p. 81. The manifectures carried on in the towns of Spain were not intended merely for home confumption, they were exported to foreign countries, and that commerce was a confiderable fource of wealth to the inhabitants. The maritime laws of Barcelona are the foundation of mercantile jurisprudence in modern times, as the Leges Rhodiæ were among the ancients. All the commercial states in Italy adopted these laws, and regulated their trade according to them.

Sandi

9

Sandi Storia Civile Veneziana, Vol. ii. 865. It appears from feveral ordonances of the Kings of France, that the merchants of Aragon and Castile were received on the same footing, and admitted to the same privileges with those of Italy. Ordonances des Roys, &c. tem. ii. p. 135. iii. 166, 504, 635. Cities in such a slourishing state became a respectable part of the least and were entitled to a considerable share in the legislature. The magistrates of Barcelona aspired to the highest bonotes. Spanish subject can enjoy, that of being covered in the presence of their sources, and of being treated as grandees of the kingdom. Origin de la dignidad de Grande de Castilla por Don Alonso Carillo Madi, 1857, p. 18.

NOTE XXXV SECT. II. P. 162.

THE military surfect of bt. Isso, the most honourable and opulent of the three Spanish orders, was instituted about the year 1170. The buil of conformation by Alexander III. is dated A. D. 1176 At that some a confiderable part of Spain was subject to the Moors, and the whole consequence experted to the depredations, not only of the enemy, but of banditti. It is no wonder, then, that an inflitution, the object of which was to corrole the enemies of the Christian faith, and to restrain and punish those who disturbed the publick peace, should be extremely popular, and meet with general encouragement. wealth and power of the order became so great, that one historian fays, that the Grand Master of St. Jago was the person in Spain of greatest power and dignity next to the King. Æl. Anton. Nebrissensis, ap. Schott. Scrip. Hisp. i. 812. Another observes, that the order possessed every thing in Castile that a King would floin most desire to obtain. Zurita Anales, v. 22. The knights took the vows of obedience, of poverty, and of conjugal chaftity. By the former they were bound implicitly to obey the commands of their grand mafter. The order could brigg into the field a Mand men at arms: Et. Ant. Nebrel. p. 013. If thele men at a were accompanied as was usual in that age, this was a manidable body of cavalry, There belonged to this order sighty-four commanderies, and two hundred priories and other benefices. Differtations fur la Chestlerie passillon, de St. Marie, p. 262. le is easy to les hove formadable de fis fovereign the command of their topping the admiration of fuch revenues. and the disposal of to many offices, must have rendered a subject. The other was orders, though inferior to that of St. Jago in power and wealth, were nevertheles very confiderable. the conquest of Granada deprived the enights of St. Jago of those enemies against whom their seal was originally directed, superstition found out a new object, in different of which they engaged to employ their courses. To their utilal oath, they added the following claule: "We intent to believe, to maintain. and to contend in publick and in private that the Virgin Mary. the mother of see, our lady, was conceived without the stain of original fin." This fingular addition was made about the middle of the seventeenth century. Honore was Marie Difsertations, &c. p. 263.

NOTE XXXVI. Sect. III. p. 164.

I HAVE frequently had occasion to take notice of the defects in police during the middle ages, occasioned by the feebleness of government, and the want of proper subordination among the Vol. I.

different ranks of men. I have observed in a former note, that this greatly interrupted the intercourse between nations, and even between different places in the same kingdom. The description which the Spanish historians give of the frequency of rapine, murder, and every act of violence, in all the province Spain, are amazing, and prefent to us the idea of a focier the little removed from the disorder and turbulence of that water has been called a state of nature. Zurita Anales de Aragin 175. Al. Am. Nebriffenfis rer. a Ferdin. gestar. Mist. ap. Schottum II. 840. Though the excels of these diforders rendered the inflitution of the South Hermandad necessary, great care was taken at first to avoid giving any offence or alarm to the The jurisdiction of the judges of the Framandad was nobility. expressly confined to crimes that violated the publick peace. All other offences were left to the cognizance of the ordinary judges. If a person was guilty of the most actorious perjury, in any trial before a judge of the Hermandad, he could not punish him, but was obliged to remit the cale to the ordinary judge of the place. Commentaria in Regias Hispan. Constitut. per Alph. de Azevedo, pars v. p. 220, &c. fol. Duagi, 1612. Notwithstanding these restrictions, the Barons were tentible how much the Hermandad would extract on their jurisdiction. In Caffile, some opposition was made to the institution; but Ferdinand had the address to obtain the consent of the Constable to the introduction of the Hermandad into that part of the kingdom where his estate lay; and by that means, as well as the popularity of the inftitution, he furmounted every obstacle that stood in its way. El. Ant. Nebrissen. 851. In Aragon, the Nobles combined against it with greater spirit; and Ferdinand, though he supported it with vigour, was obliged to make fome concessions in order † order to reconcile them. Zurita Anales de Arag. iv. 356. The power and revenue of the Hermandad in Castile seems to have been very great. Ferdinand, when preparing for the war against the Moors of Granada, required of the Hermandad to sure the Moors of Granada, required of the Hermandad to sure the beasts of burden, together with eight thousand meas to conduct them, and he obtained what he demanded. El. Ant. Nebriss. 881. The Hermandad has been sound to be of someth use in preserving peace, and restraining or detecting crimes, that it is still continued in Spass, although it be no longer necessary either for moderating the power of the nobility, or extending that of the course.

NOTE XXXVII. SECT. III. p. 167.

Nothing is more common among Antiquarians, and there is not a more copious fource of error than to decide concerning the institutions and manners of past ages, by the forms and ideas which prevail in their own times. The French lawyers in the feventeenth and eighteenth centuries having found their fovereigns in possession of aniouse power, seem to think it a duty incumbent on them, to maintain that fuch unbounded authority belonged to the crown in every period of their monarchy. "The government of France, says M. de Real very gravely, is purely monarchical at this day, as it was from the beginning. Our Kings were absolute originally as they are at present." Science du Governement, tom. ii. p. 31. It is impossible, however, to conceive two states of civil society more unlike to each other, than that of the French nation under Clovis, and that under Louis XV. It is evident from the codes of laws of the various tribes which settled in Gaul and the countries adjacent to it, as well. Z z 2 well as from the history of Gregory of Tours, and other early annalists, that among all these people the form of government was extremely rude and fimple, and that they had scarce begun to acquire the first rudiments of that order and police which are necessary in extensive societies. The King or leader had the command of foldiers or companions, who followed his fa from choice, not by constraint. I have produced the classes evidence of this, Note VI. An event related by Gregory of Tours, lib. iv. c. 14. affords the most striking proof of the dependance of the early French Kings on the fentiments and inclination of their people. Liouving landing marched at the head of his army, in the year 553, against the Samue, that people, intimidated at his approach, fued for peace, and thered to pay a large fum to the offended constarch. Clotaire was willing to close with what they property. But his army infilted to be led forth to battle. The King employed all his eloquence to perfusile them to appear of what the Saxons were ready to pay. The Saxons, in these to look them, increased their original offer. The King reserved his follicitations: But the army enraged, ruthed upon the King, tore his tent in pieces, dragged him out of it, and would have fain him on the ipot, if he had not consented to lead them initantly against the enemy.

rity, even while at the head of their army, their prerogative during peace will be found to be still more confined. They ascended the throne not by any hereditary right, but in confequence of the election of their subjects. In order to avoid an unnecessary number of quotations, I refer my readers to Hottomanni Franco-gallia, cap. vi. p. 47. edit. 1573, where they will find the fullest proof of this from Gregory of Tours, Amoinus, and the most authentick historians of the Meroyingian Kings. The effect of this election was not to invest them with absolute power. Whatever related to the general welfare of the nation, was submitted to publick deliberation, and determined by the full age of the people, in the annual afficiolies called Les Champs des Mars and Les Champs de Mai. These affemblies called Champs, because, according to the custom of all the tarbarous nations, they were held in the open air, in forme plain capable of containing the vast number of persons who had a right to be present Jo. Isc., Sorberus de Confitiis veterum Germanorum, vol. 1, 1000 & They were denominated Champs do Mars and Mai, from the manths in which they were held strong free man feems to have had a right to be present in these assemblies, Sorberus, 1841. § 123, Szc. The ancient shouls of the Franks describe the persons who were prefent in the afferably held A. D. Beandiele words: In placito Ingelheimenfi convenient marifices resiones, minores, facerdotes, reguli, duces, comites, prefect, cises, oppidani, Apud Sorber. § 304. There every thing that concerned the happinels of their country, fays an ancient historians every thing that could be of benefit to the Franks was confidered, and enjoined. degarius ap. Du Cange Gloffar, voc. Campus Martii. Chlotha. rius II. describes the business, and acknowledges the authority of these assemblies. They are called, says he, that wintever relates to the common fafety may be confidered and resolved by common deliberation; and whatever they determine, to that I will conform. Amoinus de Gest. Franc. lib. iv. c. i. ap. Bouquet Recueil. iii. 116. The flatutory clauses, or words of legiflative authority in the decrees issued in these assemblies, run not in the name of the King alone. "We have treated, fays Childebert, in a decree, A. D. 532, in the affembly of March, together withour Nobles, concerning some affairs, and we now publish the conclusion, that it may come to the knowledge of all." Childeb. Decret, ap. Bouquet Recueil des Histor. tom. iv. p. 3. Wehave agreed together with our vaffals. Ibid. § 2. It is agreed. in the affembly in which we were all united. Ihid 44. Salic laws, the most venerable monument of French jurispens dence, were enacted in the same manner. Dickertrumt Salicani legem proceres ipsius gentis, qui tune temporis apud cam erant Suit autem electi de pluribus viri quatuor qui per tres Mallos convenientes, omnes canfarum origines follicité discurrendo, tractantes de lingulis judicians decreverant por modo. Præf. Leg. Salic. ap. Bouquet. Toid p. 122. est apud regem & principes ejus, de apud cuntum populum christianum, qui infra regnum Merwingerum confidutit. Ibid. p. 124. Nay, even in their charters, the Kings of the first race are careful to specify that they were granted with the confent of their vallals. Ego Childeberrus Rex und cum confeniu & voluntate Francorum, &sc. A.D. 558. Bouquet, ibid. 622. Chlotharius III. una cum patribus moltris episcopis, optimatibus, cæterisque palatii nostri ministris, A. D. 664 Ibid. 648. consensus fidelium notingum. Mettly Observ. tom. i. p. 230. The historians likewise describe the functions of the King in the distional affemblies in such terms, as imply that his authority there was extremely small, and that every thing depended on the court itself. Ipfe Rex (fays the authors of Annales Francorum, speaking of the Field of March) sedebat in sella regia, circumstante exercitu, præcipiebatque is, die illo, quicquid a Francis decretum erat. Bouquet Recueil, tom. ii. p. 647.

THAT

THAT the general affemblies exercised supreme jurisdiction over all persons, and with respect to all causes, is so evident as to stand in need of no proof. The trial of Brunehaut, A. D. 613, how unjust soever the sentence against her may be, as related by Fredegarius, Chron. cap. 42. Bouquet. ibid. 430, is in the sufficient proof of this. The notorious violence and iniquity of the sentence serve to demonstrate the extent of jurisdiction which this assembly possessed, as a Prince so sanguinary as Clothaire II. thought the sanction of its authority would be sufficient to justify his rigorous treatment of the mother and grandmother of so many larges.

WITH the conferring densities an ele Prince, we may observe that anyong nations whole manners and political institutions are imple, the publick, as well as individuals, having few wants, they are unacquainted with taxes, and free uncivilized tribes distain to submit to the states imposition. This was remarkably the case of the Germans, and of all the various people that iffued from that country. Tacitus pronounces two tribes not to be of German origin, because they inbmitted to pay De Morib. Germ. c. and ipeaking of another tribe taxcs. according to the ideas prevalent in Cermany, he lays, " they were not degraded by the imposition of taxes." Itad. 6,20. Upon their fettlement in Gaul, we may conclude that while elated with the confciousness of victory, they would not renounce the high-spirited ideas of their ancestors, or voluntarily submit to a burden which they regarded as a badge of servitude. evidence of the earliest records and historians justify this conclu-M. de Montesquieu in the twelfth and subsequent chapters of the thirtcenth book of l'Esprit des Loix, and M. de Mably

Mably Observat. sur l'Hist. de France, tom. i. p. 247. have investigated this fact with great attention, and have proved clearly that the property of no free-man among the Franks was subject to any stand tax. That the state required nothing from persons of this rank but military service at their own expence, and that they should entertain the King in their houses when he was upon any progress through his dominions, or his allieurs when sent on any publick employment, surnishing them with carriages and horses. Monarcha subsided almost entirely upon the revenues of their own domains, and upon the perquistes arising from the addition of inflice, together with a few small sines and sortenines. The reader may find them in Observat. de M. de Mably, vol. 18.

When any cathodries aid was granted by free-men to their lovereign it was purely voluntary. In the annual affembly of March or May it was the cultom to make the King a present of money, of bories or arms, or of some other thing of value. This was at ancientation, and derived from their ancestors the Germans. Mos est civitatibus, ultro ac viritim conferri principibus velarmentorum vel frugum, quod pro honore acceptum, etiam necessitatibus subvenit. Tacit de Mor. Germ. c. 15. These gifts, if we may form a judgment concerning them from the general terms in which they are mentioned by the ancient historians, were considerable, and made no small part of the royal revenue. Many passages to this purpose are produced by M. du Cange, Dissert, iv. sur Joinville, 153. Sometimes a conquered people specified the gift which they bound themselves

Annales Metenses, ap. Du Cange, ibid. p. 155. It is probable that the first step towards taxation was to ascertain the value of these gifts which were originally gratuitous, and to compel the people to pay the sum at which they were rated. Still, however, some memory of their original was preserved, and the aids granted to monarchs in all the kingdoms of Europe were termed benevolences or free-gifts.

THE Kings of the lesind race in France were raised to the throne by the election of the people. Pepinus Rex pius, says an author who wrote a tew years after the transaction which . he records, per authoritatem Papar, & unctionem fancii chrifmatis, & electionem omnium Francorum in regni folio fublimatus est. Clausula de Pepini confecratione ap. Bouq. Recueil des Histor. tom. v. p. q. Atthelametime, as the chief men of the nation had transferred the crown from one family to another, an oath was exacted of them that they thould maintain on the throne the family which they had now promoted; ut nunquain de alterius lumbis regem in avo prafumant eligere. Ibid. p. 10. This oath the nation faithfully observed during a considerable space of time. The posterity of Pippin kept possession of the throne; but with respect to the manner of dividing their dominions among their children, Princes were obliged to confult the general affembly of the nation. Thus Pippin himself, A. D. 768, appointed his two fons, Charles and Carlomannus, to reign as joint fovereigns; but he did this, una cum confensu Francorum & procerum fuorum seu & episcoporum, before whom he laid the matter in their general affembly. Conventus apud fanctum Dionysium. Capitular, vol. i. p. 187. This destination Vol. f. Aaa the the French confirmed in a subsequent assembly, which was called upon the death of Pippin; for, as Eginhart relates, they not only appointed them Kings, but by their authority they regulated the limits of their respective territories, Vita Car. Magni ap. Bouquet Receuil, tom. v. p. 90. In the same manner, it was by the authority of the supreme assemblies that any dispute which arose among the descendants of the royal family was determined. Charlemagne recognizes this important part of their jurisdiction, and confirms it in his charter concerning the partition of his dominions; for he appoints, that in case of any incertainty with respect to the right of the same that it can be appointed to the right of the same that it can be considered. Capitular.

UNDER the fecond race of Kings, the affembly of the nation, diffinguished by the name of Conventus, Walli, Placita, were regularly affembled ones a year at least, and frequently twice in the year. One of the most valuable monuments of the history of France is the treatife of Hinemary, artibishop of Rheims, de ordine Palatii. He died A. D. 862, only fixty-eight years after Charlemagne, and he related that short discourse the facts which were communicated to him by Adalhardus, a minifter and confident of Charlemagne. From him we learn that this great monarch never failed to hold the general affembly of his fubjects every year. In quo placito generalitas universorum majorum tam clericorum quam laicorum conveniebat. oper. edit. Sirmondi, vol. ii. c. 29. 211. In these assemblies, matters which related to the general fafety and flate of the kingdom were always discussed, before they entered upon any priwate or less important business. Ibid. c. 33. p. 213. His immediate immediate fuccessors imitated his example, and transacted no affair of importance without the advice of their great council.

UNDER the second race of Kings, the genius of the French government continued to be in a good measure democratical. The nobles, the dignified ecclefiaftics, and the great officers of crown, were not the only members of the national council; the people, or the whole body of free men, either in perform or by their representatives, had a right to be present in it. Hincmarus, in describing the manner of holding the general assemblies, fave, that if the state was favourable, they met in the open air, beautiful and the whole was favourable, they met in the ted to these states and the stied clergy were separated from the laity, and the countres wel buijufmodi principes fibimet honorificabiliter a cetera multisudiae legregarentur. Ibid. p. c. 35. p. 114. Agobardus, archbilisop of Lyons, thus describes a national council in the year 1533, wherein he was present. ubique conventus extitit en reverentifimis episcopis, & magnificentissimis viris iniustribas, collegio quoque abbatum & comitum, promiscuzque ziatu dignitatis populo. The cetera multitude of Hindragonis the same with the populus of Agobardus, and both describe the interior order of freemen, the same who were afterwards known in France by the name of the third estate, and in England by the name of commons. The people. as well as the members of higher dignity, were admitted to a thare of the legislative power. Thus, by a law, A. D. 803. it is ordained, " that the question shall be put to the people with respect to every new law, and if they shall agree to it, they shall consirm it by their fignature. Capit. vol. i. 394. There are two capitularia which convey to us a full idea of the part which the people had in the administration of government.

Aaa 2

When

When they felt the weight of any grievance, they had a right to petition the fovereign for redrefs. One of these petitions, in which they defire that ecclefiafticks might be exempted from bearing arms, and from ferving in person against the enemy, is still extant. It is addressed to Charlemagne, A. D. 803, and expressed in such terms as could have been used only by men conscious of liberty, and of the extensive privileges which they They conclude with requiring him to grant their demand, if he wished that they should any longer continue faith ful subjects to him. That great monarch, instead of being offended or surprized at the boldness their petition, received it in a most gracious manner, and the boldness to comply with it. But sensible that he as held as your possess legislative authority, he promises to by the matter before the next general allembly, that their things as were of common concern to all might be there considered and established by common consent. Capitul. tom. i. p. 405 -- 409. As the people by their petitions brought matters to be propoled in the general affembly, we learn from another capital are the form in which they were approved there, and enacted as laws. The propositions were read aloud, and then the people were required to declare whether they affented to them or not. They fignified their affent by crying three times, " We are fatisfied," and then the capitulare was confirmed by the subscription of the monarch, the clergy and the chief men of the laity. Capitul. tem. i. p. 627. A. D. 822. It feems probable from a capitulare of Carolus Calvus, A. D. 851, that the fovereign could not refuse his affent to what was proposed and established by his subjects in the general affembly. Tit. ix. § 6. Capitul. vol. ii. p. 47. It is unnecessary to multiply quotations concerning the legiflative legislative power of the national assembly of France under the second race, or concerning its right to determine with regard to peace and war. The uniform style of the Capitularia is an abundant confirmation of the former. The reader who desires any farther information with respect to the latter, may consult Les Origines ou l'Ancien Gouvernement de la France, tom. ini. p. 87, &cc. What has been said with respect to the admission of the people or their representatives into the supreme assembly merits attention not only in tracing the progress of the French government, but on account of the light which it throws upon a similar question when the control of the legislative body in that kingdom.

NOTE XXXVIII DECT. III. p. 168.

That important change which the confitution of France underwent, when the fertilative power was transferred from the great council of the sation to the King, has been explained by the French antiquarities with left care, than they bestow in illustrating other events in their history. For that reason I have endeavoured with the greater attention to trace the steps which led to this memorable resolution. I shall here add some particulars which tend farther to illustrate it. The Leges Salice, the Leges Burgundionum, and other codes published by the several tribes which settled in Gaul, were general laws extending to every person, to every province and district where their authority was acknowledged. But they seem to have become obsolete; and the reason of their falling into disuse is very obvious. Almost the whole property of the nation was allodial when these laws were framed. But when the feudal institutions became general, and gave rife to an infinite variety of questions peculiar to that species of tenure, the ancient codes were of no use in deciding with regard to these, because they could not contain regulations applicable to cases which did not exist at the time when they were compiled. This considerable change in the nature of property made it necessary to publish the new regulations contained in the Capitularia. thele, as is evident from the perulal of them, were general laws extending to the whole French nation, in the general afformbly of which they were enacted. The weakness of the greater part of the monarchs of the second race, and the disorder into which the nation and answer by the depredations of the Normans, encourses the bary of usurp an independant power formerly unknown as transe. The nature and extent of that jurisdiction which they affumed. I have formerly confidered. The political union of the kingdom was at an end, its ancient conflictation was diffollowed, and only a feudal relation subsisted between the King and his vassals. The regal jurisdiction extended no further than the domains of the crown. Under the last Kings of the second race, these were reduced almost to nothing. Under the first Kings of the third race, they comprehended little more than the patrimonial effate of Hugh Capet, which he annexed to the crown. Even with this accession, they continued to be very narrow. Velly. Hist. de France, tom. iii. p. 32. Many of the most considerable provinces of France did not at first acknowledge Hugh Capet as a lawful Monarch. There are still extant several charters, granted during the first years of his reign, with this remarkable clause in the form of dating the charter; "Deo regnante, rege ex-" pectante," regnante domino nostro Jesu Christo, Francis au-

tem

tem contra jus regnum usurpante Ugone rege. Bouquet Recueil. tom. x. p. 544. A Monarch whose title was thus openly disputed, was not in a condition to affert the royal jurisdiction. or to limit that of the barons.

ALL these circumstances rendered it casy for the barons to usurp the rights of royalty within their own territories. The capitularia became no less obsolete than the ancient laws; local customs were every where introduced, and became the fole rule by which all civil transactions were conducted, and all causes were tried. The desterful ignorance, which became general in France, disting the starth and tenth centuries, contri-buted to the started as a commany law. Few persons, except ecclesiaftics, court read, as as it was not possible for them to have recourse to written laws, either as their guide in business, or their rule in administring justice, the customary law univerfally prevailed.

DURING this period, the general affembly of the nation feems not to have been called, nor to have once exerted its legiflative authority. Local conforms regulated and decided every thing. A striking proof of this occurs in tracing the progress of the French jurisprudence. The last of the Capitularia collected by M. Baluze, was issued in the year 921, by Charles the Simple. An hundred and thirty years elapsed from that period to the publication of the first ordonance of the Kings of the third race, contained in the great collection of M. Lauriere. and the first ordonance which appears to be an act of legislation extending to the whole kingdom, is that of Philip Augustus, A. D. 1190. Ordon. tom. i. p. 1, 18. During that long period period of one hundred and fixty-nine years, all transactions were directed by local customs, and to addition was made to the statutory law of France. The ordenances, previous to the reign of Philip Augustus, contain regulations the authority of which did not extend beyond the King's domains.

WARIOUS instances occur of the caution with which the Kings of France ventured at first to exercise legislative authority. Ab. de Mahly produces at ordonance of Philip Augustus, A. D. 1206 concerning the Jews, who, in that age, were in some measure the property of the lord the mide territories they re-But it is not to much an a cot rous poster as a treaty of the King with the countels of Changing, and the comte de Dampierre; and the regulations in it feem to be eliablished not by his authority, but by their confent. Observat. für l'hist. de France, ii. p. 355. In the same manner an ordonance of Louis VIII. concerning the Jews, A. D. 1223, is a contract between the King and his nobles, with respect to their manner of treating that unhappy race of men. Ordon. tom. i. p. 47. Establissemens of St. Louis, though well adapted to serve as general laws to the whole kingdom were not published as such, but only as a complete code of customary law, to be of authority within the King's domains. The wifdom, the equity and the order confineuous in that code of St. Louis, procured it a favourable reception throughout the kingdom. The veneration due to the virtues and good intentions of its author, contributed not a little to reconcile the nation to that legislative authority, which the King began to assume. Soon after his time, the idea of the King's possessing supreme legislative power became common. If, fays Beaumanoir, the King makes any establishment establishment specially for his own domain, the barons may nevertheless adhere to their ancient customs; but if the establishment be general, it shall be current throughout the whole kingdom, and we ought to believe that such establishments are made with mature deliberation, and for the general good. Cout. de Beauvoisis, c. 48. p. 265. Though the Kings of the third race did not call the general affembly of the nation, during the long period from Hugh Capet to Philip the Fair, yet they from to have confulted the bishops and burons who happened to be present in their court, with respect to any new less which the Examples of this occur Orden, town a program The practice icems to have continued as lare as the second of St. Louis, when the statistic authority of the crown was well cstablished ardon. p. 58. A.D. 1246. This attention paid to the barous facilitated the King's acquiring such full possession of the legislative power, as enabled them afterwards to exercise it without observing that formality.

THE affemblies, diffinguished by the name of the States General, were first called, A. D. 1302, and were held occasionally from that period to the war south fince which time they have not been furnmoned. These wery different from the ancient affemblies of the French nation under the Kings of the first and There is no point with respect to which the fecond race. French antiquarians are more generally agreed, than in maintaining that the States General had no suffrage in the passing of laws, and possessed no proper jurisdiction. The whole tenor of the French history confirms this opinion. The form of proceeding in the States General was this. The King addressed himself to the whole body assembled in one place, and laid before them the affairs on account of which he had fummoned Вьь VOL. I. them.

The deputies of each of the three orders, of nobles, of clergy, and of the third estate, met apart, and prepared their cabier or memorial, containing their answer to the propositions which had been made to them, together with the representations which they thought proper to lay before the King. Thefe answers and representations were considered by the King in his council, and generally gave rife to an ordonance. These ordonames were not addressed to the three estates in common. Sometimes the King addressed an ordensince to each of the estates in particular. A section ea he mentioned the assembly of the three eftasse. Semetimes mention is males of the affembly of that edite to which the ordenance and adversa. Sometimes no mention at all is made of the afferbly of these which fuggetted the propriety of enacting the seas. Prefact are tom. iii. des Ordon. p. xx. Thus the States General had only the privilege of advising and remonstrating; the legislative authority refided in the King alone.

NOTE XXXIX. SECT. III. p. 172.

Is the parliament of Paris be considered by as the supreme court of justice, every thing relative to its origin and jurisdiction is clear and obvious. It is the ancient court of the King's palace, new-modelled, rendered sedentary, and invested with an extensive and ascertained jurisdiction. The power of this court, while employed in this part of its functions, is not the object of present consideration. The pretensions of the parliament to controul the exercise of the legislative authority, and its claim of a right to interpose with respect to publick affairs and the political administration of the kingdom, lead to inquiries attended with greater difficulty. As the officers and members of the parliament of Paris were anciently nominated by the King, were paid by him, and on feveral occasions were removed by him at pleasure, (Chroniq. Scandaleuse de Louis XI. chez les Mem. de Comines, tom. ii. p. 51. Edit. de M. Lenglet de Fresnoy,) they cannot be considered as representatives of the people, nor could they claim any thare in the legislative power as acting in their name. We must search for some other source of this high privilege. The parliament was originally compoled of the most eminent persons in the kingdim. The peers of France, ecclesiaftics of the highest order, and noblemen of illustrous birth were merevers of it, to whom were soon force clerks and countered learnes in the laws. Promier Recherches. p. 44, &cc. Encyclement, p. 3, 5 A court thus conflictuted has properly a committee of the States General of the kingdom, and was compoled of these barons and fideles, whom the Kings of France were accustomed to consult with regard to every act of jurisdiction or legislative authority. It was natural, therefore, during the intervals between the meetings of the States General, or during those periods when that affembly was not galled, to confult the parliament, to lay matters of publick control foreit, and to obtain its approbation and concurrence, before any ordonance was published, to which the people were required to conform. 2. Under the second race of Kings, every new law was reduced into proper form by the Chancellor of the kingdom, was proposed by him to the people, and when enacted, was committed to him to be kept among the publick records, that he might give authentick copies of it to all who should demand them. Hincm. de ord. palat. c. 16. Capitul. Car. Calv. tit. xiv. § 11. tit. xxxiii. The chancellor presided in the parliament of Paris at its first institution. Encyclopedic. Bbb 2

tom, iii. art. Chancelier, p. 88. It was therefore natural for the King to continue to employ him in his ancient functions of framing, taking into his custody, and publishing the ordonances which were issued. To an ancient copy of the Capitularia of Charlemagne, the following words are subjoined. Anno tertio Clementalini domini nostri Caroli Augusti, sub ipso anno, hac facta Capitula funt, & confignata Stephano comiti, ut hæc manifella faceret Parifis mallo publico, & illa legere faceret coram Scabines, quod ita & fecit; & omnes in uno confenterunt, quod ipii voluitent obiervare ufque in posterum, cham omnes Scabinei, Episcopi, Abbates, Mandes, manu propria inbier fignaverunt. Bouquet Recueil. 160n. v. p. 663. Mallus figuifies not only the publick affecting of the nation, but the court of justice held by the comes, as missis dominicus. bini were the judges, or the affellors of the judges in that court. Here then feems to be a very early instance, not only of laws being published in a court of justice, but of their being verified or confirmed by the subscription of the judges. If this was the common practice, it naturally introduced the verifying of edicts in the parliament of Paris. But this conjecture I propose with that diffidence, which I then in all my reasonings concerning the laws and inflitutions of foreign nations. 3. This supreme court of justice in France was dignified with the appellation of parliament, the name by which the general affembly of the nation was diffinguished towards the close of the fecond race of Kings; and men, both in reasoning and in conduct, are wonderfully influenced by the fimilarity of names. The preserving the ancient names of the magistrates established while republican government subsisted in Rome, enabled Augustus and his successors to assume new powers, with less observation, vation, and greater ease. The bestowing the same name in France upon two courts, which were extremely different, contributed not a little to confound their jurisdiction and functions.

ALL these circumstances concurred in leading the Kings of France to avail themselves of the parliament of Paris, as the instrument of reconciling the people to their exercise of legislative authority. The French, accustoment to legislative laws examined and authorized before they have published did not sufficiently distinguish between the effect of performing this in the national affembly, or in a court appointed by the King. But as that court was compared of respectable measures, and well skilled in the laws of their country, when any new edict received its sanction, that was sufficient to dispose the people to implicit submission.

edicts in the parliament of Paris became common, the parliament contended that this was necessary in order to give them legal authority. It was readilished as a fundamental maxim in French jurisprudence, that no law could be published in any other manner; that without this formality no edict or ordenance could have any effect; that the people were not bound to obey it, and ought not to consider it as an edict or ordenance until it was verified in the supreme court, after free deliberation. Roche-flavin des Parlemens de France, 4to. Gen. 1621. p. 921. The parliament, at different times, hath with great fortitude and integrity opposed the will of their sovereigns, and notwithstanding their repeated and percemptory requititions and commands, hath-refused to verify and publish such edicts as it conceived to be oppressive to the people, or subversive of the constitution of the kingdom. Roche-slavin reckons that between the year 1562, and the year 1589, the parliament resuled to verify more than a hundred edicts of the Kings. Ibid. 925. Many instances of the spirit and constancy with which the parliaments of France opposed permicious laws, and afferted their own privileges are enumerated by Limnaus Notitiz Regni Franciz, lib. i. c. 69.

Bur the power of the parliament to maintain and defend this privilege, bore no proportion to its importance, or to the courage with which its members alleged it. When any momarch was determined that an edict should be carried into execution, and found the parliament inflexibly resolved not to verify or publish it, he could easily supply this defect by the plenitude of his regal power. He repaired to the parliament in person, he took possession of his seat of justice, and commanded the edict to be read, verified, registered and published in his presence. Then, according to another maxim of French law, the King himself being research, neither the parliament, nor any magistrate whatever, can exercise any authority, or perform any function. Adveniente Principe, cellat magistratus. Roche flavin fibid. p. 928, 929. Encyclopedie tom. ix. Art. Lit de Justice, p. 581. Roche-flavin mentions several instances of Kings who actually exerted this prerogative, so fatal to the refidue of the rights and liberties transmitted to the French by their ancestors. Pasquier produces some instances of the same kind. Rech. p. 61. Limnæus enumerates many others, which Page 1 the length to which this note has fwelled, prevents me from inferting inferting at length, though they tend greatly to illustrate this important article in the French history, p. 245. Thus by an exertion of prerogative, which, though violent, seems to be constitutional, and is justified by innumerable precedents, all the efforts of the parliament to limit and contract the King's legislative authority, are rendered inessectived.

I WAVE not attempted to explain the confliction or jurisdiction of any parliament in France, but that of Parks and of them are formed upon the model of that most ancient and respectable tributal, and all my observations concerning it will apply with full force to them.

NOTE XL. SECT. III. p. 177.

The humiliating posture, in which a great Emperor implored absolution, is an event so singular, that the words in which Gregory himself describes it, merit a place here, and convey a striking picture of the arregance of that Pontiss. Per triduum, ante portam waite desposito omni regio cultu, miscrabiliter, utpote discalceatus, & lancis indutus, persistens, non prius cum multo sietu apostoliez miscrationis auxilium, & consolationem implorari destitit, quam omnes qui ibi aderant, & ad quos rumor ille pervenit, ad tantam pietatem, & compassionis miscricordiam movit, ut pro eo multis precibus & lacrimis intercedentes, omnes quidem insolitam nostrz mentis danitiem mirarentur; nonulli vero in nobis non apostolicz sedis gravitatem, sed quasi tyrannicz feritatis ciudelitatem esse cla-marent.

marent. Epist. Gregor. ap. Memorie della Contessa Matilda da Fran. Mar. Fiorentini. Lucca. 1756, vol. i. p. 174.

NOTE XII. SECT. III. p. 186.

As I have endeavoured in the history to trace the various steps in the progress of the constitution of the Empire, and to explain the peculiarities in its policy very fully, it is not necessary to add much by way of Elustration. What appears to be of any importance I shall make under distinct heads.

P. WITH respect to the power, jurisdiction and revenue of the Emperors. A very just idea of these may be formed by attending to the view which Pfeffel gives of the rights of the Emperors at two different periods. The first at the close of the Saxon race, A. D. 1024. These, according to his enumeration were the right of conferring all the great ecclefiastical benefices in Germany; of receiving the revenues of them aduring a vacancy; of Mort-main, or of succeeding to the effects of ecclefialticks who died intellige. The right of confirming or of annulling the elections of the Popes. The right of affembling councils, and of appointing them to decide concerning the affairs of the church. The right of conferring the title of King upon their vallals. The right of granting vacent fiefs. The right of receiving the revenues of the Empire, whether arising from the Imperial domains, from imposts and tolls, from gold or filver mines, from the taxes paid by the Jews, or from forfeitures. The right of governing Italy as its proper fovereigns. The right of erecting free cities, and of establishing fairs in them. The right of assembling the diets of the Empire, and of fixing the time of their duration. The right of coining money, and of conferring that privilege on the states of the Empire. The eight of administring both high and low justice within the territories of the different states. Abregé p. 160. The other period is at the struction of the Emperors of the families of Lamemburg, and liaverin. A. D. 1437. According to the lame author the imperial preventives at that time were the night of conferring all dignition and titles, except the privilege of being a flate of the larging. The right of Preces primarie is of appainted thee during their reign a dignitary in each elimpter or returned house. of granting dispensitions with respect to the age of the legit. The right of erecting entire, and of antiquing the privilege of coining money. The right of calling the moetings of the diet and of prefiding in them. Abrege, Sec. p. 507. It were mile to show that M. Pfeffel is well founded in all these affertions. and to confirm them by the tellimony of the most respectable authors. In the one period the dimpenors appear as mighty fovereigns with extensive prerogatives; in the other as the heads of a confederacy with very histoical powers.

4 24 14

THE revenues of the Emperors decreated fifth more than their authority. The early Emperors, and particularly those of the Saxon line, besides their vast patrimonial or hereditary territories, possessed an extensive domain both in Italy and Germany which belonged to them as Emperors. Italy belonged to the Emperors as their proper kingdom, and the revenues which they drew from it were very confiderable. The first alienations of the Imperial revenue were made in this country. The Italian cities having acquired wealth, and afoiring ...

C c cVol. I.

ing at independance, purchased their liberty from different Emperors, as I have observed Note XV. The sums which they paid, and the Emperors with whom they concluded these bargains, are mentioned by Casp. Klockius de Erario Norimb. 1671. p. 8. Charles IV and his fon Wenceslaus dissipated all that comains of the Italian branch of the domain. The German domain lay chiefly upon the banks of the Rhine, and was under the government of the Counts Palatine. J. is not easy to make out the boundaries, or to estimate the value of this ancient domain, which has been in long incorporated with the territories of different Princes. Some hints with respecies it may be found in the glodary of Speidelius which he has intituted Speculum Juridico-Philologico-politico-Historicum Observationum, &c. Norimb. 1673. vol. i. 679. 1045. a more full account of it is given by Klockius de Ærario, p. 84. Befides this, the Emperors possessed considerable districts of land lying intermixed with the estates of the Dukes and barons. They were accustomed to visit these frequently, and drew from them what was fufficient to support their court during the sime of their residence Annalista, an Struv. tom. i. 611. A great part of these were seizes by the nobles during the long interregnum, or during the wars occasioned by the contests between the Emperors and the court of Rome. At the same time that fuch incroschments were made on the fixed or territorial. property of the Emperors, they were robbed almost entirely of their casual revenues. The Princes and barons appropriating to themselves taxes and duties of every kind, which had usually been paid to them, Pfeffel Abregé, p. 374. The profuse and inconfiderate ambition of Charles IV. fquandered whatever remained of the Imperial revenues after to many defalcations.

He, in the year 1376, in order to prevail with the Electors to chuse his son Wenceslaus King of the Romans, promised each of them a hundred thousand crowns. But being unable to pay . fo large a fum, and eager to fecure the election to his fon, he alienated to the three ecclesiastical Electors, and to the Count Palatine, fuch countries as fill belonged to the Imperial domain on the banks of the Rhine, and likewife made over them all the taxes and tolls then levied by the Emperors in that district. Trithemius, and the author of the Chronicle of Aradehurgh enumerate the territories and taxes avhigh were the Mensted. and represent this 'se' the class and facilities to the imperial authority. Straty. Corn. vol. i. p. 437. Lifrom that passed, the threds of the ancient revenues possessed by the Emperors have been so inconsiderable, that, in the opinion of Speidelius, alt that they yield would be so far from defraying the expence of supporting their houshold, that they would not pay the charge of maintaining the posts established in the Empire. Speculum, &c. vol. i. p. 680. Thefe funds, inconfiderable as they were, continued to decrease. Granvelle, the minister of Charles V. afferted in the year 1546. in presence of several of the German Princes, that his matter drew no, money at all from the Empire. Sleid. History of the Reformation. Lond. 1680. p. 372. The same is the case at present. Traite de droit Publique de l'Empire par M. le Coq de Villeray, p. 55. From the reign of Charles IV, whom Maximilian called the pest of the Empire, the Emperors have depended entirely on their hereditary dominions, as the only fource of their power and even of their sublistence.

THE ancient mode of electing the Emperors, and the various changes which it underwent, require fome illustration. The Imperial grown, as well as those of most monarchies in Europe, were originally attained by election. An opinion long prevailed appear the antiquaries and publick lawyers of Germany, that the right of churing the Emperors was vefted in the archithage of Menez, Cologne and Treves, the King of Bohemin, the Duke of Samony, the Marquis of Brandenbusch, _ and the Count Palatine of the Rhine, by an edict of Otho III, confirmed and regard W. about the your ago. But the whole tenor of history contraction this opinion. Is supears that from the carlied period in the hillary of Germany, the perion who was to ships over all was elected by the fuffrage of all. Thus Connect I was elected by all the people of the Franks, fay fome amendida; by all the princes and chiefmen, fay others; by all the racion, fay others. Scotheir words, Struw. Corp. 211. Convingius de German, Imper. Repub. Auromuta Sex. Ehroduni 1654. p. rag. In the year 1024, posterior to the supposed regulations of Othe His Conrad H, was elected by all the think men, and his clothen was approved and confirmed by the people. Struv. Corp. aby the challes of Louisius III. A. D. 1125, fixty thoufand perions of all marks were prefent. His was named by the chief men, and their nomination was approved by the people. Struv. ibid. pt. 357. The first author who mentions the seven-Electors is Martinus Polonus, who flourished in the reign of Frederick H, which ended A. D. 1250. We find that in all the ancient elections to which I have referred, the Princes of greatest power and authority were allowed by their countrymen to name the person whom they wished to appoint Emperor, and the people approved or disapproved of their nomination.

PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

This privilege of voting first is called by the German lawyers the right of Prataxation. Pfeffel Abregé, p. 316. This was the first origin of the exclusive right which the Electors atquired. The Electors possessed the most extensive territories of any Princes in the Empire; all the great effices of the flate were in their hands by hereditary right; as foon as they obtained or engroffed fo much influence in the election, as to be allowed the right of prætaxation, it became unnecessary for the inferior ecclesiasticks and barons to attent, when had no other function but that of confirming the deed of thele more powerful Princes, by their affent. During times of thronlence, they could not refort to the place of election, without a numerous retinue of ermed valids, the expence of which they were obliged to defray out of their own revenues. The rights of the seven Electors were supported by all the descendants allies of their powerful families, who shared in the splender and influence, which they emjoyed by this diffinguishing prisvilege. Pfeffel. Abrege, p. 376. The feven Electors were confidered as the representatives of all the control composed the highest class of German and There were three archbishops, chancellors of the three great districts into which the Empire was anciently divided; one King; one Duke; one Marquis; and one Count. All these circumstances contributed. to render the introduction of this confiderable innovation into the constitution of the Germanick body, extremely easy. Every thing of importance, relating to this branch of the political state of the Empire, is well illustrated by Onuphrius Panvinius an Augustinian Monk of Verona, who lived in the reign of Charles V. His treatife, if we make some allowance for that partiality which he expresses in favour of the powers which the Popes claimed in the Empire, has the merit of being one of the first works in which a contraverted point in history is examined with critical precision, and with a proper attention to that evidence which is derived from records, or the testimony of contemporary historians. It is inserted by Goldastus in his Politica Imperialis.

As the Mediars have engroffed the fole right of chuling the Emperors, they have affumed likewise that of depoling them. This bird power the Electors have not only prefumed to claim, but have ventured, in more than one instance, to exercise. In the year 1298, a part of the Electors deposed Adolphus of Malian and substituted Albert of Austria in his place. reasons on which they found their sentence, show that this deed flowed from factious, not from publick-spirited motives. Struv. Corp. vol. i. 540. In the first year of the fifteenth century, the Electors deposed Wenceslaus, and placed the Imperial crown on the head of Rupert Elector Palatine. The act of depolition is still extant. Goldalli Constit. vol. i. 379. It is pronounced in the name and by the authority of the Electors, and confirmed by feveral prelates and barons of the Empire, who were present. These exertions of the electoral power demonstrate that the Imperial authority was funk very low.

THE other privileges of the electors, and the rights of the electoral college are explained by the writers on the publick law in Germany.

3. WITH respect to the diets or general assemblies of the Empire, it would be necessary, if my object were to write a particular history of Germany, to enter into a minute detail, concerning the forms of affembling it, the persons who have right to be present, their division into several Colleges or Benches, the objects of their deliberation, the mode in which they carry on their debates or give their fuffrages, and the authority of their decrees or recesses. But in a general history it is sufficient to obleme, that, originally, the diets of the Empire were perfectly the same with the assemblies of March and of Mar, held by the Kings of France. They met, at least, page a year. Every freeman had a right to be present. They were assembling in which a monarch deliberated with his subjective concerning their common interest. Arumans de comitiis Rom. German. Imperii, 410, Jenæ. 1660, cap. 7. No. 20, &c.. But when the Princes, dianified ecolofialties, and barons, acquired territorial and independant jurisdiction, the diet became an affembly of the separate states, which formed the confederacy of which the Emperor was head. While the constitution of the Empire remained in its primitive form, attendance on the diets was a duty, like the other fervices due from feudal subjects to their sovereign, which the members were bound to perform in person; and if any member who had a right to be present in the diet neglected to attend in person, he not only lost his vote, but was hable to an heavy penalty. Arumæus de Comit. c. 5. no. 40. Whereas, from the time that the members of the diet became independant states, the right of fuffrage was annexed to the territory or dignity, not to the person. The members, if they could not, or would not attend in person, might send their deputies, as Princes fend fend ambassadors, and they were entitled to exercise all the rights belonging to their constituents. Ibid. No 42, 46, 49. By degrees, and upon the same principle of considering the diet as an affembly of independant states, in which each confederate had the eight of fuffrage, if any member possessed more than one of those times or characters which entitle to a feat in the ding he was showed a proportional number of suffrage. Pfeffel Abrece 622. From the same cause the Imported agence, as foon as they became free, and acquired impresser and independent parallelion within their territories, were renerved as mention of the diet. The powers of the diet extend to every thing relative to the commune concern of the Germanick body, or that can inereff affect it as a confederacy. The diet takes no cognitance of the interior administration in the different States, unless that happens to disturb or threaten the general safety.

4. WITH respect to the Imperial chamber, the jurisdiction of which has been the great source of order and tranquillity in Germany, it is necessary to observe, that this court was instituted in order to put an end to the calamities occasioned by private wars in Germany. I have already traced the rise and progress of this practice, and pointed out its pernicious effects at fully as their extensive influence during the middle ages merited. In Germany, private wars seem to have been more frequent and productive of worse consequences than in the other countries of Europe. There are obvious reasons for this. The nobility of Germany were extremely numerous, and the causes of their diffention multiplied in proportion. The territorial jurisdiction which the German nobles acquired, was more compleat than that professed by their order in other nations. They became, in reality, independent powers, and they claimed all the privileges of that characters. The long interregmen accustomed them to an uncontroused licence, and led them to forget that subordination which is never in order to maintain publick tranquillity. At the time when the other monarchs of Lunpe began to acquire fuch an increase despres and revenues, as added new force to their government, the authority and revenues of the Emperors continued gradually to decline. The diets of the Empire, which alone had authority to judge between such mighty barons, and power to enforce its decifions, met very feldom. Conring. Acroamata, p. 234. The diets when they did affemble were often composed of leveral thousand members, Chronic. Constant. ap. Struv. Corp. i. p. 546. and were mere tumultuary affemblies, ill-qualified to decide concerning any question of right. The session of the diets continucd only two or three days; Pfeffel Abregé, p. 244, so that they had no time to hear or discuss any cause that was in the smallest degree intricate. Thus Germany was left, in some measure, without any court of judicature, capable of repressing the evils of private war.

ALL the expedients which were employed in other countries of Europe in order to restrain this practice, and which I have described Note XXI. were tried in Germany with little effect. The confederacies of the nobles and of the cities, and the division of Germany into various circles, which Vol. I.

Ddd I men-

I mentioned in that Note, were found likewise insufficient. As a last remedy, the Germans had recourse to arbiters whom they called Austrege. The barons and states in different parts of Germany joined in conventions, by which they bound themselves to refer all contraversies, that might arise between them, to the determination of Aufrege, and to submit to their fentences as final. These arbiters are named fometimes in the treaty of convention, an instance of which occurs in Ludewie Relique Manuscr. omnie zvi, vol. ii. 212. sometimes they were chosen by mutual confent; formetimes they were appointed by neutral persons; and lometimes the choice was left to be decided by los. Datt. de Pace publica imperis, lib. i. cap. 27. Nº 60, &c., Speidelius Speculum, &c. voc. Auftrag. p. 95. Upon the introduction of this practice, the publick tribunals of justice became, in a great measure, useless, and were almost entirely deferted.

In order to re-establish the authority of government, Maximilian instituted the Imperial chamber, at the period which I have mentioned. This tribunal consisted originally of a president, who was always a nobleman of the first order, and of sixteen judges. The president was appointed by the Emperor, and the judges, partly by him, and partly by the States, according to forms which it is unnecessary to describe. A sum was imposed, with their own consent, on the States of the Empire, for paying the falaries of the judges, and officers in this court. The Imperial chamber was established first at Francfort on the Maine. During the reign of Charles V. it was removed to Spires, and continued in that city above a century and a half.

PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS

It is now fixed at Wetzlar. This court takes cognizince of all questions concerning civil right between the States of the Empire, and passes judgment in the last resort, and without appeal. To it belongs, likewise, the privilege of judging in criminal causes, which may be edusidered as connected with the preservation of the publick passes. Pressel Abregé, 560.

ALL causes relating to points of foundal right or jurisdiction. together with fuch as respect the perception, which hold of the Empire in Italy, belong properly to the difficultion of the Aulick council. This tribunal was formed upon the model of the ancient court of the palace instituted by the Europerors of Germany. It depended not upon the States of the Empire; but upon the Emperor; he having the right of appointing at please fure all the judges of whom it is composed. Maximilian, in order to procure some compensation for the diminution of his authority, by the powers vefted in the Imperial chamber, prevailed on the diet A. D. 1512. to give its consent to the eftablishment of the Aulick council. Since that time, it has been a great object of policy in the court of Vienna to extend the jurisdiction, and support the authority of the Auliek council, and to circumscribe and weaken those of the Imperial chamber. The tedious forms and dilatory proceedings of the Imperial chamber have furnished the Emperors with pretexts for doing fo. Lites Spiræ, according to the witticism of a German lawyer, spirant. sed nunquam exspirant. Such delays are unavoidable in a court composed of members named by States, jealous of each other. Whereas the judges of the Aulick council, depending on one mafter, and being responsible to him alone, are more vigorous and decifive. Puffendorf. de Statu Imper. German. cap. v. § 20. Pfeffel Abregé, p. 581.

Ddd2

NOTE XLIL SECT. III. p. 189.

THE description which There given of the Turkish government is constrable to the accounts of the most intelligent travellers who have vitted that Empire. The count de Marfigli, in his treatile concerning the military flate of the Turkish Empire, chapit and the Lithor of observations on the religion. laws, government and manners of the Turks, published at London 1768, vol. i. p. 81. differ from other writers who have described the political constitution of that powerful monarchy. As they had opportunity, during their long residence in Turkey, to observe the order and justice conspicuous in several departments of administration, they seem unwilling to admit that it should be denominated a despotism. But when the form of government in any country is represented to be despotick, this does not suppose that the power of the monarch is continually exerted in acts of violence injuffice and cruelty. Under governments of every species, unless when some frantick tyrant happens to hold the scepter, the ordinary administration must be conformable to the principles of justice, and if not active in promoting the welfare of the people, cannot certainly have their destruction for its object. A state, in which the sovereign possesses the absolute command of a vast military force, together with the disposal of an extensive revenue; in which the people have no privileges, and no part either immediate or remote in legislation; in which there is no body of hereditary nobility, icalous jealous of their own rights and distinctions, to stand as an intermediate order between the Prince and the people, cannot be distinguished by any name but that of a despotism. The restraints, however, which I have mentioned, arising from the Capiculy, and from religion, are powerful. But they are not such as change the nature or denomination of the government. When a despotick Prince employs an arrest force to import his authority, he commits the support power to their hands. The Prætorian bands in Some, dethroned subsciered, and exalted Princes, in the same waston manner with the soldiery of the Porte at Constantinople. But support that the Roman Emperors have been considered by all arisingst writers as possessing despotick power.

PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

NOTE XLIII. SECT. III. p. 190.

THE institution, the discipline, and privileges of the Janizaries are described by all the authors who give any account of the Turkish government. The manner in which enthusiasm was employed in order to inspire them with courage is thus related by Prince Cantemir, "When American L had formed them into a body, he sent them to Haji Bektash a Turkish Saint, samous for his miracles and propheties, desiring him to give them a banner, to pray to God for their success, and to give them a name. The saint, when they appeared in his presence, put the sleeve of his gown upon one of their heads, and says, Let them be called Yengicheri. Let their countenance be ever bright, their hands victorious, their sword keen, let their spear fpear always hang over the heads of their enemies, and whereever they go, may they return with a shining face. History of the Ottoman Empire, p. 38. The number of Janizaries, at the first infinitetion of the body, was not considerable. Under Solyman, in the year i rar they amounted to twelve thousand.

Since that time their publisher has greatly increased, Marsigli, Etat. Sec. this is a standard solyman possessed such increased authority a standard formidable body within the bounds of pacticus. The transfers to limit the power of the Sulvans was count in that are species by sagacious observers. Nicolas Daughthams, who accompanied M. D'Aramon amballador from Houry H. of France to Solyman, published an account of his travers, in which he describes and celebrates the disapline of the Janizaries, but at the same time predicts that they would, one day, become formidable to their masters, and act the same part at Constantinople, as the Practorian bands had done at Rome. Collection of Voyages from the Earl of Oxford's Library, vol. i. p. 596.

THE NOTE KLIV. SECT. III. p. 192.

Solven an the Magnificent, to whom the Turkish historians have given the himme of Canumi, or instituter of rules, first brought the himmes and military establishment of the Turkish Empire into a regular form. He divided the military force into the Capiculy or soldiery of the Porte, which was properly the standing army, and Serrataculy or soldiers appointed to guard the frontiers. The chief strength of the latter consisted of those who held Timariots and Ziams. These were portions of land granted to certain persons for life, in much the fame: manner as the military fiefs among the nations of Europe, in xeturn for which military fervice was performed. Solyman, in his Canun-Name or book of regulations, fixed with great accuracy the extent of these lands in each province of his Empire, appointed the precise number of soldiers each person who held a Timariot or a Ziam thould be a just the field, and established the pay which they should be the engaged in service. Count Marsigli and Sir Fill Strong dave given extracts from this book of statutations, that it appears that the ordinary establishment of the Turkish state excepted as headred and fifty thousand men. When these are added to the foldiery of the Porte, they formed a military power which vafily exceeded what any Christian State could command. Marsigli Etat Militaire, &c. p. 136 Rycaut fate of the Ottoman Empire, book iii, ch. 2. As Solyman, during his active reign, was engaged fo constantly in war, that his troops were always in the field, the Serrataculy became almost equal to the Janizaries themselves in discipline and valour.

It is not furprizing, then, that the authors of the finteenth century should represent the Turks as far superior to the Christians, both in the knowledge and in the presence of the art of war. Guicciardini informs us, that the Italians learned the art of fortifying towns from the Turks. Histor. lib. war p. 266. Busbequius, who was ambassador from Ferdinand to Selyman, and who had opportunity to observe the state both of the Christian and Turkish armies, published a discourse concerning the best manner of carrying on war against the Turks, in which which he points out at great length the immense advantages which the infidels possessed with respect to discipline, and military improvements of every kind. Busbequii opera edit. Elzevir. p. 393, &c. The testimony of other authors might be added, if the matter were, in any degree, doubtful.

BEFORE I conclude these Proofs and Illustrations, I ought to explain the realon white confident in them; one of which it is necessary to measure on my own account, the other to obviate an objection to the work.

the state of the state of the state of the state of

In all my inquires and disquisitions concerning the progress of government, manners, literature and commerce during the middle ages, as well as in my delineations of the political conflitution of the different States of Europe at the opening of the fixteenth century, have not once mentioned M. de Voltaire, who, in his Estar fur Phistoire generale, has reviewed the same period, and has treated of all these subjects. This does not proceed from inattention to the works of that extraordinary man; whose genius, no less enterprizing than universal, has attempted almost every different species of literary composition. many of these he excels. In all, if he had left religion untouched, he is instructive and agreeable. But as he seldom imitates the example of modern historians in citing the authors from whom they derived their information, I could not, with propriety, appeal to his authority in confirmation of any doubtful or unknown fact. I have often, however, followed him as my guide in these researches; and he has not only pointed out the

PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

the facts with respect to which it was of importance to inquire, but the conclusions which it was proper to draw from them. If he had, at the same time, mentioned the books which relate these particulars, a great part of my labour would have been unnecessary, and many of his readers who now consider him only as an entertaining and lively writer, would find that he is a learned and well-informed historian.

As to the other omiffion; every intelligent reader must have observed, that I have not entered wither in the historical part of this volume, or in the Preofs and Illustrations, into the same detail with respect to the ancient laws and customs * of the British kingdoms, as concerning those of the other European nations. As the capital facts with regard to the progress, of government and manners in their own country are known to most of my readers, such a detail appeared to me to be less essential. Such facts and observations, however, as were necessary towards completing my design in this part of the work. I have mentioned under the different articles which are the subjects of my disquisitions. The state of government, in all the nations of Europe, having been nearly the same during several ages, nothing can tend more to illustrate the progress of the English constitution, than a careful inquiry into the laws and customs of the kingdoms on the continent. fource of information has been too much neglected by the English antiquarians and lawyers. Filled with admiration of that happy constitution now established in Great Britain, they have been more attentive to its forms and principles, than to the condition and ideas of remote times, which, in almost every Vol. I. E e e particular, particular, differ from the present. While engaged in perusing the laws, charters, and early historians of the continental kingdoms, I have often been led to think that an attempt to illustrate the progress of the English jurisprudence and policy, by a comparison with those of other kingdoms in a similar situation, would be of great utility, and might throw much light on some points which are now obscure, and decide others, which have been long contraverted.

INDEX

TO THE

FIRST VOLUME.

AFRICA, the shocking devastations made there by the Vandals, 199.

Alanus, his character of the clergy in his time, 233.

Alfred the Great, his complaint of the ignorance of the clergy, 233.

Allodial possession of land, explained, 214. How such possession became subject to military service, ib. Distinguished from beneficiary tenures, 215. How converted into feudal tenures, 222.

Allodium, the etymology of that word, 225.

Ammianus, his character of the Huns, 201,

Amurath, Sultan, the body of Janizaries formed by him, 190.

Anathema, form of that denounced against robbers during the middle ages, 330.

Aralia, the antient Greek philosophy cultivated there, while lost in Europe, 321, Note xxviii. The progress of philosophy from thence to Europe, 322.

Aragon, rife of the kingdom of, 146. Its union with Castile, ib. The constitution and form of its government, 150. The privileges of its Cortes, 151. Office and jurisdiction of the Justiza, 152. The regal power very confined, 153. Form of the allegiance swore to the Kings of, ib. The power of the nobility to control the regal power, 344. Their privilege of union taken away by Peter IV. ib. The establishment of the Inquisition opposed there, 347.

Armies, standing, the rise of, traced, 92. By what means they became more general in Europe, 112.

Arms, the profession of, the most honourable, in uncivilized nations, 67.

Ass, an account of the antient Romish seast of, 237, Note xii.

Affemblies, legislative, how formed, 36.

Affemblies, general, of France, their power under the first race of Kings, 165. Under the second and third, 166. At what period they lost their legislative authority, 167.

Attila, King of the Huns, account of his reception of the Roman ambassadors, 197, Note iii. Some account of his conquests, 202.

Avila, an assembly of Castilian nobles there, solemnly try, and depose Henry IV. their King, 149.

Auflia, the house of, by whom founded,

Eee2 Baillis,

INDEX TO THE

Baillis, in the old French law, their office explained, 208.

Balance of power, the first rise of, in Europe,

dir. The progress of, 112.

ř

Baltic, the first source of wealth, to the towns fituated on that fea, 335.

Percelona, its trade, riches, and privileges at the close of the fifteenth century, 351.

grows, their independence, and mutual holilities, under the feudal faftem, the How affected by the infranchisement of cities, 34. Acquire a participation in legislative government, 36. Their private wars for reducts of personal injuries, 44. Methods considered to abolifa these contentions 46. Original of their supreme and independent justified tion, 57. The had affine to the content of t The bad effects refulting from tion, 57. these privileges, 58. . The Reps taken by Princes to reduce their courts, 60. How obliged to relinquish their judicial prerogatives, 68. Of Italy, subjected to municipal laws, 247, Note xv. Their right of territorial jurisdiction explained, 303. Their emoluments from causes decided in their. courts, 304.

Benefices, under the feudal system, a history of, 217. When they became hereditary, 220.

Books, an inquiry into the materials of the antient ones, 233. The loss of old manuscripts accounted for, 234. The great prices they fold for in antient times, 235.

Boroughs, representatives of, how introduced into national councils, 37.

Bittons antient, their diffres and dejection when deferted by the Romans, and harraffed by the Picts and Caledonians, 195, Note i.

Brotherhood of God, an account of that affociation for extinguishing private wars, 282.

Bruges, how it became the chief mart for Itahan commodities during the middle ages, 334

Burgundy, Mary heiress of, the importance with which her choice in a hulband was confidered by all Europe, 104. The treacherous views of Lewis XI. of France toward her, 105. Is married to the Archduke Maximilian, 107. The influence of this match on the state of Europe, ik.

One for, his account of the antient Germans, spared with that of Tacitus, 206.

Gambray, treaty of, its object, 117. The confederacy diffolved, 110.

Canon Law, an inquiry into, 62. Progress of ecclesiastical usurpations, 63. The maxima of, more equitable than the civil courts of the middle ages, 64.

Castile, rise of the kingdom of, 146. Its union with Aragon, ib. Its King Henry IV. fotennily tried and deposed in an assembly of the nobles, 149. The constitution and government of that kingdom, 154. A history of the Cortes of, and its privileges, ib. The kingdom originally elective, 348, Note xxxii.

Catalenia, the spirited behaviour of the people there in defence of their rights, against their King John II. of Aragon, 149.

Censuales, a species of the Oblati, or voluntary slaves, the obligations they entered into defcribed, 272.

Centenarii, or inferior judges in the middle ages, the extraordinary oath required from them, 329.

Champs de Mars, and de Mai, account of those assemblies of the antient Gauls, 357.

Charlemagne, his law to prevent private wars for redress of personal injuries, 46, 278. State of Germany under his descendants, domains, 378.

Charles IV. Emperor, distipates the Imperial

Charles V. Emperor, an emulator of the heroic conduct of his rival, Francis I. 72. His future grandeur founded on the marriage of the Archduke Maximilian with the heiress of Burgundy, 107.

Charles VII. of France, the first who introduced standing armies in Europe, 93. His successful extension of the regal prerogative, 96.

Charles VIII. of France, his character, 108. How induced to invade Italy, ib. His refources and preparations for this enterprize, 109. His rapid success, 110. A combination of the Italian states formed against him, 111. Is forced to return back to France, ib. The distressed state of his revenues by this expedition, 116.

Charlevoix, his account of the North American Indians, made use of in a comparison between them and the antient Germans, 209.

Charters, of immunity or franchise, an inquiry into the nature of those granted by the barons of France to the towns under their jusildictions, 251, No.e xvi. Of communities.

ties, granted by the Kings of France, how they tended to chablish regular government, 33, 252.

Chivalry, the origin of, 69. Its beneficial effects on human manners, 70. The enthusiasm of, distinguished from its salutary confequences, 71.

Christianity, corrupted when first brought into Europe, 73. Its influence in freeing mankind from the bondage of the feudal policy, 268, Note xx.

Oircles of Germany, the occasion of their being formed, 179.

Cities, the antient flate of, under the feudal policy, 31. The freedom of, where first established, 32. Charters of community, why granted in France by Louis ie Gross, 33. Obtain the like all over Europe, 34. Acquire political consideration, 36.

Clercy, the progress of their usurpations, 63.

Their plan of juriforudence more perfect than that of the civil courts in the middle ages, 64. The great ignorance of, in the early feudal times of Europe, 233.

Chriza, flave to Willa, widow of Duke Hugo, extract from the charter of manumiffion, granted to her, 270.

Clermont, council of, refolves on the Holy war, 24. See Peter the hermit, and Crufades.

Clotaire 1. instance of the small authority he had over his army, 356.

Clotharius II. his account of the popular affemblies among the antient Gauls, 357.

Clovis, the founder of the French monarchy, unable to retain a facred vase taken by his army, from being distributed by lot among the rest of the plunder, 212, Note vii.

C.lleges, the first establishment of, in Europe,

323.

Combut, judicial, the prohibition of, an improvement in the administration of justice, 47. The foundation and universality of this mode of trial, 52. The pernicious effects of, 54. Various expedients for abolishing this practice, 55. The antient Swedish law of, for words of reproach, 291. Positive evidence, or points of proof, rendered ineffectual by it, 295. This mode of trial authorized by the ecclesiastics, 297. The last instances of, in the histories of France and England, 298.

Commerce, the spirit of crusading how far favourable to, at that early period, 29. The first establishment of free corporations, 32. Charters of community why granted by Louis le Gross, 33. The like practice obtains all over Europe, 34. The salutary effects of these institutions, 34. The salutary effects of these institutions, 34. The sow state of, during the middle ages, 77. Carries contributing to its revival, is. Promoted by the Hansenic league, 79. Is cultivased in the Netherlands, 80. Is introduced into England by Edward III. 81. The mental cial confequences resulting from the revival of, 81. The carry cultivation of, in Italy,

Common law, the first compilation of, made in England by Lord Chief Justice Glanville, 317.

Communities; fee Charters, Gilies, Commerce, and Corporations.

Comnena, Annie, her character of the Crufadors,

Compass, mariner's, when invented, and its influence on the extention of commerce, 78.

Composition for personal injuries, the motive for establishing, 278. The custom of, deduced from the practice of the antient Germans, 299.

Compurgators, introduced as evidence in the jurisprudence of the middle ages, 49.

Condottieri, in the Italian policy, what, 133.

Conrad, count of Franconia, how he obtained clection to the Empire, 173.

Conradin, the last rightful heir to the crown of Naples of the house of Swabia, his unhappyfate, 138.

Conflance, treaty of, between the Emperor Frederic Barbaroffa, and the free cities of Italy,

250

Conflantinople, its flourishing state at the time of the Crusades, 26. When first taken by the Turks, 187. The Crusaders how looked upon there, 244. The account given of this city by the Latin Writers, 215. Conflictations, popular, how formed, 36.

Cordova, Gonfalvo de, secures the crown of Naples to Ferdinand of Aragon, 140.

Corporations, and bodies politic, the establishments of, how far favourable to the improvement of manners, 30. The privileges of, where first claimed, 32. Charters of community. munity, why granted by Louis le Gross in France, 33. The institution of, obtains all over Europe, 34. Their effects, 16.

Cartes of Aragon, its constitution and privileges, 151, 345.

Corres of Castile, a history of, and an account of its constitution and privileges, 154. The vigilance with which it guarded its privileges against the encroachments of the regal power, 155.

The enthuliastic zeal with which they were undertaken, 23. First promoted by Peter the hermit, 24. The success of them, 25. The consequences resulting from them, 25. Their effects on manners, 26. On property, 27. How advantageous to the enlargement of the regal power of the European Princes, 28. The commercial effects of, 29, 78. The universal frenzy for engaging in these expeditions accounted for, 238, Note xiii. The privileges granted to those who engaged in them, 240. Stephen carl of Chartres and Blois, his account of them, 242. The expences of conducting them, how raised, ib. Character given of the Crusaders by the Greek writers, 244.

D

Debt, the first hint of attaching moveables for the recovery of, derived from the canon law, 316.

Debtors, how considered in the rude and simple

state of society, 254.

Diets of Germany, some account of, 383.

Differs in the different faculties, dispute procedence with knights, 323.

E

Ecclesiation jurisprudence, more perfect in its plan than the civil courts of the middle ages, 64.

Ecclefiastic, when, and by what degrees they claimed exemption from civil jurisdiction, 312. Military talents cultivated and exertified by those of the middle ages, 319.

Filward III. of England, his endeavours to introduce commerce into his kingdom, br. Electors of Germany, the rive of their privileges,

182

Eloy, St. his definition or defeription of a good Christeau, 236, Note Xi.

Emperors of Germany, an inquiry into their power, jurisdiction, and revenue, 376, Note all. The antient mode of electing them, 380.

England, a summary view of the contests between, and France, 88. The confequences of its losing its continental possessions, or. The power of the crown how extended, 102. See Henry VII. Why so many marks of Saxon usages and language, in comparifon with those of the Normans, to be found in; 197, Note IV. When corporations began to be established in, 264. Instances of the long continuance of personal servitude there, 273. Inquiry into the Saxon laws for putting an end to private wars, 285. The causes of the speedy decline of private wars there, proposed to the researches of Antiquarians, 286. The last instances of judicial combat recorded in the history of, 298. The territorial jurisdiction of the barons now abolished, 310. Cause of the slow progress of commerce there, 336. The first commercial treaty entered into by, 338.

Evidence, the imperfect nature of that admitted in law proceedings during the middle ages, 48. Rendered ineffectual by the judicial combat, 295.

Europe, the alterations in, by the conquests of the Romans, 2. The improvements the nations of, received in exchange for their liberties, ib. Its disadvantages under this change of circumstances, ib. Inquiry into the supposed populousness of the antient northern nations, 4. The savage desolations exercifed by the Goths, Vandals, and Huns, 9. The universal change occasioned by their irruptions and conqueits, 10. The first rudiments of the present policy of, to be deduced from this period, 11. Origin of the feudal system, 13. See Feudal System. The general barbarism introduced with this policy, 18. At what time government and manners began to improve, 21. The causes and events which contributed to this improvement, 22. See Cruja le, Corporations, Prople. The mileries occasioned by private wars in, 45. Methods taken to suppress them, 46. Judicial combats prohibited, 47. The defects of judicial proceedings in the middle ares, 48. The influence of superstition in these proceedings, 50. The origin of the independent territorial jurisdictions of the barons, 57. The bad confequences of their judicial power, 58. The steps taken by Princes to abolish their courts, 60. An inquiry into the canon law, 62. vival of the Roman law, 66. Effects of the spirit of chivalry, 69. How improved by the progress of science and cultivation of literature, 72. Christianity corrupted when first received in, 73. Scholastic theology the first object of learning in, 74. Low state of commerce in, during the middle ages, 77. Commerce revives in Italy, 78. Is promoted by the Hanseatic league, 79. Is cultivated in the Netherlands, 80. effects of the progress of commerce, on the polishing of manners, 81. The effects of the marriage of the heiress of Burgundy with the archduke Maximilian, on the flate of, 107. By what means flanding forces became general in, 112. Consequences of the league of Cambray to, 117. A view of the political conflitution of the several States of, at the commencement of the fixteenth century, 122. Italy, 124. The papacy, ib. Venice, 132. Florence, 135. Naples, 136. Milan, 140. Spain, 144. France, 165. Germany, 172. Turkey, 187. Instances of the fmall intercourse among nations in the middle ages, 325.

FIRST VOLUME.

Feedum, the etymology of that word, 226. Fiefs, under the feudal fystem, a history of, 217. When they became hereditary, 200.

Ferdinand, King of Aragon, unites the Spanish monarch), by his marriage with Isabeila of Castile, 146. His schemes to exalt the regal power, 160. Resumes former grants of land from his barons, 151. Unites to the crown the grand mallerships of the three military one s, ib. Why he patronized the affociation called the Hay brotherbood, against the barons, 164.

Feudal system, the origin of, deduced, 13. The primary object of this policy, 14. Its deficiencies for interior government, 15. Tenures of land, how established under, ib. The rife of intestine discords among the barons under, 16. The fervile state of the people, ib. The weak authories of the King, ib. Its influence on the external operations of war, 17. The general extinction of all arts and sciences effected by, 18. Its operation on religion, 19. Its influence on the character of the human mind, 20. At what time government and manners began to be improved, 21. The causes and exents which contributed to this improvement, 22. See Crusades. The antient state of cities under, 31. The frame of national councils under this policy, 36. How altered by the progress, of civil liberty, 37. An inquiry into the administration of justice under, 42. Private war, 42. Indicial combat, 47. The inwar, 43. Indicial combat, 47. dependant jurifdictions of the barons, 57-The distinction between free men and vasfals under, 216. How strangers were confidered and treated under, 327.

Fitzstephens, observations on his account of the flate of London, at the time of Henry II.

264.

Flanders. See Netherlands.

Florence, a view of the constitution of, at the commencement of the fixteenth century, The influence acquired by Colmo-135.

di Medici in, 136.

France, by what means the towns in, first obtained charters of community, 33. Ordia nances of Louis X. and his Brother Philip in favour of civil liberty, 40. Methods. employed to suppress private wars, 46. St. Louis attempts to discountenance judicial combat, 55. A view of the contells between, and England, 88. The confequences of its recovering its provinces from England, 91. The monarchy of, how strengthened by this event, 92. The rife of stand-The regal prerogative ing forces in, 93. strengthened by this measure, 95. extention of the regal prerogative vigoroully. purfued by Louis XI, 97. See Louis XI. The effects of the invation of Italy by Charles VIII. 108. See Charles VIII. National infantry established in, 115. League of Cambray formed against the Venetians, 118. Battle of Ghiarradadda, ib. An inquiry into its antient government and laws, 165. The power of the general affemblies under the first race of Kings, ib. Under the fecond and third, 1(6. The regal power confined to the King's own domains, 167. When the general affembly or states general, loil their legislative authority, ib. When the Kings

INDEX TO THE

Kings began to affect their legislative power, 268. When the government of, became purely monarchical, 169. The regal power mevertheless restrained by the privileges of the nobility, 170. An inquiry into the jurifdiction of its parliaments, particularly that of Paris, 171. How the allodial property of land there was altered into feudal, 223. The progress of liberty in that kingdom traced, 265. Note xix. The attempts to establish liberty there unsuccessful, 267. The last instance of judicial combat recorded in the history of, 298. The present government of, compared with dist of ancient Gaul, 355. Note xxxvii. The Statesgeneral, when first assembled, 366.

Francis I. of France, his character influenced by the spirit of chivalry, 71. Is emulated by the Emperor Charles V. 72.

Frederick Barbarossa, Emperor, the free cities of Italy unite against him, 250. Treaty of Constance with them, ib. Was the first who granted privileges to the cities in Germany, 261.

Fredum, in the antient German usages explained, 300.

Freemen, how distinguished from vassals, under the seudal policy, 216, 230. Why often induced to surrender their freedom and become slaves, 231.

Fulcherius Carnotenfis, his character of the city of Constantinople, 245.

C

Gaul, how allodial property of land was changed into feudal, there, 223. The government of, compared with that of modern France, 355. Note xxxvii. The small authority the Kings of, enjoyed over their armies illustrated in an anecdote of Clotaire I. 356. Account of the popular affemblics of, 357. The salic laws how enacted, 358. Were not subject to taxation, 359. See France.

Geoffrey de Villebardouin, his account of the magnificence of Constantinople at the time when taken by the Crufaders, 246.

Germans, antient, an account of their ufages and way of life, 206. Their method of engaging in war, 207. A comparison between them and the North American Indians, 209. Why they had no cities, 260.

Note xvii. The practice of compounding for personal injuries by fines, deduced from their ulages, 299.

Germany, little interested in foreign concerns at the beginning of the fifteenth century, 89. National infantry established in, 114. State of under Charlemagne and his descendants, 173. Conrad, count of Franconia chosen Emperor, ib. His successors in the Imperial dignity, ib. How the nobility of, acquired independant fovereign authority, 174. The fatal effects of aggrandizing the clergy The contests between the Empein, 175. ror Henry IV. and Pope Gregory VII. 176. Rife of the factions of Guelfs and Ghibelines, 177. Decline of the Imperial authority, ib. The House of Austria, by whom founded, ib. A total change in the political constitution of the Empire, 178. The state of anarchy in which it continued to the time of Maximilian the immediate predecessor of Charles V. 179. Divided into circles, ib. The Imperial chamber inftituted, 180. The Aulic council reformed, ib. A view of its political constitution at the commencement of the ensuing history, ib. Its defects pointed out, 181. The Imperial dignity and power compared, 182. Election of the Emperors, 183. The repugnant forms of civil policy in the feveral States of, 184. The opposition between the secular and ecclesiastical members of, 185. The united body hence incapable of acting with vigour, 186. When cities first began to be built in, 260. Note xvii. When the cities of, first acquired municipal privileges. The artizans of, when infranchised, 262. Immediate cities in the German jurifprudence, what, 263. The great calamities occasioned there by private wars, 288. Origin of the league of the Rhine, ib. When private wars were finally abolished there, 289. Inquiry into the power, jurisdiction and revenue of its Emperors, 3-6. Note xli. The antient mode of electing the Emperors, 380. Account of the diets, 383.

Ghibelines, See Guelis.

Ghiarradadda, the battle of, fatal to the Venetians, 118.

Glanville, Lord Chief Justice, the first who compiled a body of common law, in all Europe, 317.

Goths,

Goths, Vandals, and Huns, over-run the Roman empire, and precipitate its downfal, 3. The state of the countries from whence they issued, 4. The motives of their first excur-sions, 5. How they came to settle in the countries they conquered, 6. A comparison drawn between them and the Romans, at the period of their irruptions, 8. Compared with the native Americans, q. The defolations they occasioned in Europe, ib. The universal change made by them in the state of Europe, 10. The principles on which they made their settlements, 12. Origin of the feudal system, 13. See Feudal System. An inquiry into the administration of justice among, 42. Their private wars, 43. Destroy the monuments of the Roman arts, 72. Their contempt of the Romans, and hatred of their arts, 196. Note ii. Their aversion to literature, ib. No authentic account of their origin, or antient history existing, ib. Government, how limited by the feudal policy, 16. The effects of the Crusades on, 28. How affected by the infranchisement of Legislative assemblies how cities, 35. formed, 36. Private wars destructive to the authority of, 46. Methods employed to abolish this hoftile mode of redresting injuries, ib. How affected by the supream independant jurisdictions of the barons, 58. The steps toward abolishing them, 60. The origin and growth of royal courts of justice, 60. How influenced by the revival of science and literature, 76. A view of, at the beginning of the fifteenth century, 84. The power of Monarchs then very limited, 85. Their revenues small, ib. Their armies unfit for conquest, ib. The Princes hence incapable of extensive plans of opera-The kingdoms very little contion, 87. nected with each other, 88. How the eftorts of, from this period became more powerful and extensive, 90. The confequences of England losing its provinces in France, or. The schemes of Louis XI. of France to extend the regal power, 97. See Louis XI. The power of the English crown enlarged 102. See Henry VII. As also that of Spain, 103. How the use of standing armies became general, 112. A view of the political constitution of the severa I states of Europe, at the commencement of the Vol. I.

fixteenth century, 124. In what respects the charters of communities granted by the Kings of France, tended to introduce a regular form of, 253.

Greece, the breeding of filk worms, when introduced there, 331.

Greek Emperors, their magnificence at Conflantinople, 244.

Gregory of Tours, remarks on the state of Europe during the period of which he wrote the history, 21.

Gregory the Great, Pope, his reason for granting liberty to his flaves, 269.

Gregory VII. Pope, the foundation of his contests with Henry IV. Emperor of Germany, 176. The mean submission he extorted from Henry, 177. His own account of this affair, 375.

Guelfi, and Ghibelines, rife of those factions in Germany, 177.

Guicciardini, the historian, instance of his superstitious reverence for Pope Clement VII. 132. Note.

Guntherus, a Monk, his character of Confitantinople, at the time when taken by the Crusaders, 245.

H

Hanfeatic league, when formed, and its influence on the extension of commerce, 79. 336.

Henry IV. of Castile, solemnly tried and deposed by an assembly of Castilian nobles,

Henry IV. Emperor of Germany, the humiliating state to which he was reduced by Pope

Gregory VII. 176, 375. Note xl.

Henry VII. of England, his fituation at his accession to the crown, 102. Enables his barons to break their entails and sell their estates, ib. Prohibits his barons keeping retainers, ib. Encourages argiculture and commerce, ib.

Herebannum, the nature of this fine under the

foundal policy, explained, 216.

Hermandad, Santa, account of that institution,

History, the most calamitous period of, pointed out, 10.

Holy Brotherhood, an affociation in Spain under that name, on what opeafion formed, 163.

Fff '

INDE'X TO THE

Holy Land, the original inducements of the Christians to rescue it from the hands of the Infidels, 22. See Grusades, and Peter the Hermit.

Honour, points of, the antient Swedish law for determining, 291.

Hospitality, enforced by flatutes during the middle ages, 326.

Huns, instance of their enthusiastic passion for war, 197. Note in. Some account of their policy and manners, 201, 206. See Goths.

1

Janizaries, origin, and formidable nature of those troops, 189.

Imperial chamber of Germany, instituted, 180. The occasion of its institution, 384.

Indians, North American, a comparison drawn between them and the antient Germans, 209. Industry, the spirit of, how excited by the infranchisement of cities, 35.

Infantry, the advantages of, beyond cavalry, taught to the rest of Europe by the Swiss, 114. National bodies of, established in Germany, ib. In France and Spain, 115.

Interitance, and right of representation, between orphan grandsons and their uncles, how decided in the tenth century, 293.

Interest of money, the necessity of admitting, in a commercial view, 332. Preposterously condemned by the churchmen of the middle ages, 333. The cause hence, of the exorbitant exactions of the Lombard bankers,

Italy, when the cities of them began to form themselves into bodies politic, 32. Commerce first improved there, and the reasons of it, 78. The revolutions in Europe occassioned by the invasion of, by Charles VIII. of France, 107. The flate of, at the time of this invalion, 109. The rapid success of Charles, 110. A combination of the States of, drives Charles out of, and gives birth to the balance of power in Europe, 111. The political fituation of, at the commencement of the fixteenth century, 124. The papacy, ib. Venice, 132. Florence, 135. Naples, 136. Milan, 140. Evidences of the desolation made there by the northern invaders of the Roman Empire, 203. How the cities of, obtained their municipal privileges, 247.

٠.

Note xv. State of, under Frederick I. 248. Treaty of Constance between the free cities of, and the Emperor Frederick Barbarosta, 250.

Judgment of God, modes of acquittal by, in the law proceedings during the middle ages, 50. 289. Note xxii.

Judicium Crucis, method of trial by, 290.

Julius II. Pope, forms a contederacy, against the Venetians at Cambray, 118. Seizes part of the Venetian territories, ib. The consederacy dissolved, 119. Turns his schemes against France, and England, ib.

Jurisprudence, ecclesiastical, more perfect in its plan, than the civil courts of the middle ages, 46. See Law.

Justice, an inquiry into the administration of, under the feudal policy, 42. The steps toward the improvement of, as civil liberty advanced, 43. Redress chiefly pursued by private wars, 44. Methods taken to suppress private wais, 46. Judicial combats prohibited, 47. The defects of judicial proceedings in the middle ages, 48. Compurgators, the nature of that kind of evidence, 49. Methods of trial by ordeal, or acquittal by Judgment of God, 50. Origin of the fupream independant jurisdictions of the feudal barons, 57. The extent and had effects of their privileges, 58. The steps taken by monarchs to reduce the barons courts, 60. The growth of royal courts of justice, 61. Inquiry into the canon law, 62. How improved by the revival of the Roman law, 66. When the administration of, became a diflinct profession, 68.

Justiza, or supreme judge of Aragon, his office and privileges, 152. An inquiry by whom this officer was elected, 339. Who was eligible to this office, 340. Nature of the tribunal appointed to controll his administration, 341. Instance of his extensive power, 342.

K

King, his power how circumscribed by the barons, under the feudal system, 16. By what means the Crusades tended to enlarge the regal authority, 28.

Koran, its influence in checking the Sultans of the Ottoman empire, 189.

Land,

FIRST VOLUME.

L

Land, how held at the effablishment of the feudal system, 15. See Feudal system.

Land, the property of, how confidered by the antient barbarous nations, 213. Note viii. Allodial possession of, explained, 214. The proprietors how subjected to military service, 215. Allodial and beneficiary possession distinguished, ib. Allodial property why generally converted into seudal, 222.

Law, when the study of it, became a distinct employment, 68.

Law, Canon, an inquiry into, 62. The maxims of, more equitable than the civil courts of the middle ages, 64. When first compiled, 315.

Law, Roman, how it sunk into oblivion, 65. Circumstances which savoured the revival of 1t, 66. Its effects in improving the administration of justice, ib. Its rapid spread over Europe, 316. Note xxv.

Lauburrows, in the Soutish law, explained,

254.

Liberty, civil, the rife and progress of, traced, 32. How sayoured by the ordinances of Louis X. of France, and his brother Philip, 40. The spirit of, how excited in France, 215. Note xix. The particulars included in the charges of, granted to husbandmen, 268. Note xx. The influence of the Christian religion in extending, ib. The several opportunities of obtaining, 280.

Limiges, council of, its endeavours to extin-

puish private wars, 279.

Literature, the cultivation of, greatly inftrumental in civilizing the nations of Europe, 72. Why the first efforts of, ill directed, 73. The good effects nevertheless of the spuit of inquiry excited, 75. How checked in its progress, th. Its influence on manners and government, 70.

Liturey, the presence between the Musarabic, and Romish, how ascertained in Spain, 294.

Lombards, the first bankers in Europe, 332. The motive of their exacting exorbitant interest, 333.

Landon, its flourishing state at the time of Henry II. 264.

Louis le Gross, of France, his inducement to grant privileges to towns within his own domains, 33. See Charters.

Louis, St. the great attention he paid to the administration of justice, in appeals which came before him, 308.

Louis X. of France, his ordinances in favour civil liberty, 40.

Louis XI. of France, his character, 97. His fehemes for deprening the nobility, ib. Sows divisions among them, 99. Increases the standing forces, ib. Enlarges the revenues of the crown, ib. His address in overruling the assembly of states, 100. Extends the bounds of the French monarchy, 101. The activity of his external operations, ib. His treacherous baseness toward the heiress of Burgundy, 105. The effects of his conduct, 107.

Louis XII. his hesitation in carrying on war against the Pope, 132. Note. Asserts his right to the dutchy of Milan, and retains Ludovico Sforza in prison, 143.

M

Manfred, his struggles for the crown of Naples, 128.

Mankind, the most calamitous period in the history of, pointed out, 10.

Manners, the barbarity of, under the feudal establishments, after the overthrow of the Roman empire, 18. When they began to improve, 21. Effects of the Crusades on, 25. How improved by the infranchisement of cities, 36. How improved by the erection of royal courts of justice, in opposition to the barons courts, 61. Effects of the revival of the Roman law on, 65. The beneficial tendency of the spirit of chivalry on, 69. How influenced by the progress of science, 72. 76. How possible by the revival of commerce, 81.

M.mumiffion, particulars included in the charters of, granted to husbandmen or slayes, 268. Note xx. The form of, 269.

Maximilian, archduke of Austria, married to Mary heires of Burgundy, 107. The influence of this match on the state of Europe, ib.

Maximilian, Emperor, inflitutes the Imperial chamber, 180. Reforms the Aulic council, ib.

Med'.i, C smo di, the first of the name, the influence he acquired in Florence, 136.

Milan, the flate of the dutchy of, at the com-F(1) mencement of mencement of the fixteenth century, 140. Rise and progress of the disputes concerning the succession to, 141.

INDEX TO THE

Mind, the human, a view of, under the first establishment of the feudal policy in Europe, 20. The aera of its ultimate depression, and commencement of its improvement, 21. The progress of its operations, before the full exertion of it, 73.

Ministeriales, a class of the Oblati, or voluntary flaves, the pious motives of the obligations they entered into, 172.

Moors, make a conquest of Spain, 144. By what means weakened during their establishment there, 145. Remarks on their conduct in Spain, 147.

Municipal privileges, how obtained by the cities of Italy, 247. Note xv. Secured to them by the treaty of Conftance, 250. The favourite state of, under the Roman government, 259.

'N.

Naples, a view of the conflictation of that kingdom, at the commencement of the fixteenth century, 136. The turbulent unfettled flate of that kingdom, 137. State of the disputes concerning the succession to the crown of, 138. The pretensions of the French and Spanish monarchs to the crown of, 139.

Narbonne, community of, preamble to the writ of summons of Philip the Long, to, 265.

Note xix.

Navigation, proof of the imperfect state of,

during the middle ages, 334.

Netherlands, vigorous profecution of the manufactures of hemp and flax there, on the revival of commerce in Europe, 80.

Normans, why so few traces of their usages and language, to be found in England, in comparison with those of the Saxons, 167.

Note iv.

n

Oblati, or voluntary flaves, the classes of, specified, 271.

Ordeal, methods of trial by, during the middle ages, 50. The influence of superstition in dictating these means, 51.

Otto Frilingensis, his account of the state of Lealy under Frederic I. 248.

Ottoman empire, the origin, and despotic nature of, 187. Becomes formidable to the Christian powers, 192.

P

Papacy. See Popedom.

Paper, when first made of the present materials, 235.

Paris, an inquiry into the pre-eminent jurifdiction of its parliament over the other parliaments of France, 171. Its origin traced, 370. Note xxxix. The royal edicts registered by, before admitted to be laws, 373.

Parliaments, or legislative affemblies, how formed under the feudal policy, 36. How altered by the progress of civil liberty, 37.

People, their wretched fervile state under the feudal system, 16. 39. Released from their slavish state by the infranchisement of cities, 34. How they obtained a representation in national councils, 36. Those who lived in the country and cultivated the ground, an inquiry into their condition under the seudal policy, 227. Note ix.

Persia, murder, how punished there, 302.

Peter the Hermit, excites the European Princes to undertake the Holy War, 24.

Peter IV. King of Aragon, defeats the leaders of the Aragonese union, and destroys the privilege of these associations, 344.

Philip the Long, preamble to his writ of summons to the community of Narbonne, 205.

Note xix.

Philosophy, cultivated by the Aratians, when lost in Europe, 321. Note xxviii. Its progress from them into Europe, 322.

Pilgrimages to the Holy Land, when first undertaken, 22. See Grusades, and Peter the Hermit.

Placentia, council of, the Holy war refolved on by, 24. See Peter the Hermit, and Crufades.

Plunder, how divided among the antient northern nations, 13. Illustrated in an anecdote of Clovis, 212. Note vii.

Popedom, the highest dignity in Europe at the commencement of the fixteenth century, 124. Origin and progress of the papal power, 125. The territories of the Popes unequal to the support of their spiritual jurisdiction, ib. Their authority in their own territories extremely limited, 126. The check they received from the Roman barons. ib. Nicolas Rienzo attempts to establish a democratical government in Rome, and to destroy the papal jurisdiction, 128. papal authority confiderably strengthened by the Popes Alexander VI. and Julius II. 129. See Julius II. The permanent nature of ecclesiastical dominion, ib. The civil administration of, not uniform or consistent, 130. Rome the school of political intrigue during the fixteenth century, ib. The advantages derived from the union of spiritual and temporal authority, 131. A view of the contests between the Popes and the Emperors of Germany, 176.

Populousness of the antient northern nations,

an inquiry into, 4.

Priscus, extract from his account of the Roman embassy to Attila King of the Huns, 197. Note iii.

Proceedius, his account of the cruel devastations made by the irruption of the northern nations, 198. Note v. 201, 202.

Property, the possession of, how secured by the French charters of communities, 254.

Proveditori, in the Venetian policy, their office, 134.

Religion, how corrupted by the northern nations established in Europe under the feudal policy, 19. Its influence in freeing mankind from the feudal servitude, 268.

Repledging, the right of, in the law of Scotland, explained, 305.

Reproach, words of, the antient Swedish law of satissaction for, 291.

Revenues, royal, very finall under the feudal By what means increased, policy, 85.

Rhine, origin and intention of the league of, 288.

Rienzo, Nicolas, endeavours to rescue Rome from the papal authority, and establish a democratical form of government there,

Robbers, the anathema, pronounced against them during the middle ages, 329.

Redulph of Hapsburgh, how he attained election to the Empire of Germany, 177.

Romans, an inquiry into those advantages which enabled them to conquer the reft of. Europe, 2. The improvements they communicated in return for their conquests, ib. The disadvantages the provinces laboured under, from their dominion, ib. Their Empire overturned by the igraption of the' barbarous nations, 3. The concurrent causes of their ruin, 6. A comparison drawn between them and the northern nations, 8. All the civil arts established by them oblterated, 18. The monuments of their arra industriously destroyed by their barbarous invaders, 72.

Rome, papal. See Popedom. Regal truce, an account of, 282.

Salic laws, the manner in which they were en-

Saxons, why so many traces of their laws, language and customs to be found in England. 197. Note iv. Inquiry into their laws for putting an end to private wars, 285.

Science, the revival and progress of, how far instrumental in civilizing the nations of Europe, 72. A fummary view of the revival and progress of, in Europe, 321. Note xxviii.

Sferza, Francis, the foundation of his pretensions, to the dutchy of Milan, 142. Is murdered by his uncle Ludovico, ib.

- Ludovico, his private views in engaging Charles VIII. of France to invade Italy, 108. See Charles VIII. Murders his nephew Francis, and seizes Milan, 142. Is firipped of his dominions by Louis XII. of France, and dies in prison, 143.

Shipwrecks, the right, lords of manors claim to, whence derived, 328.

Silk, the rarity of, and the high price it bore in antient Rome, remarked, 331. breeding of filk worms, when introduced into Greece, ib.

Slanes, letters of, in the law of Scotland, what,

Slaves under the feudal policy, their wretched Oblati, or voluntary flaves, state, 226. the feveral classes of, 271.

Society, civil, the rude state of, under the feudal cstablishments after the downfal of the Roman Empire, 18. The influence of the Crusades on, 25. How improved by the ellablishment establishment of municipal communities, 30. The effects the infranchisements of the people had on, 41. Private wars how destructive to, 45. These intestine hostilities, how suppressed, 46. The administration of justice improved by the prohibition of judicial combats, 47. The growth of royal courts of justice, in opposition to the barons courts, 60. How advanced by the revival of the Roman law, 65. The effects of the spirit of chivalry in improving, 69. The revival of commerce and its influences, 78.

Solman, Sultan, his character, 171.

Ŷ,

Stain, a fummary view of its fituation, at the commencement of the fifteenth century, 89. The power of the crown of, how extended by Ferdinand, 103. National infantry established in, 115. Is conquered by the Vandals, 144. and after by the Moors, The empire of the Moors in, how weakened, 145. Rife of the kingdoms of Their union Castile and Aragon, 146. into the Spanish monarchy, ib. The antient customs still retained amidst all its revolutions, ib. Peculiarities in its conftitution and laws remarked, 148. See Aragen and Cafile. Various causes which contributed to limit the regal power in, 156. The cities of, how they attained their confideration and power, 157. The schemes of Ferdinand and Isabella, to exalt the regal power, 160. The grand masterships of the three orders, annexed to the crown, The affociation of the Holy Brotherbeed, on what occasion formed, 163. The tendency of this affociation to abridge the territorial jurifdictions of the barons, 164. The cruel devastations made by the Vandals, in the invalion of that province, 199. When the cities of, acquired municipal privileges, 263. Note xviii. The long continuance of the practice of private wars the nobility, in the time of Charles V. 350. An inquiry in o the origin and of communities or free cities in, 351.

St. Jago, the military order of, when and gn what occasion instituted, 352. Note XXXV.

Standing armies. See Armics.

States general of France, causes which rendered their authority imperfect, 167. When they lost their legislative authority, ih. When first assembled, 369. The form of proceeding in them. ib.

Stephen earl of Chartres and Blois, his account of the progress of the Crusaders, 242.

Scienthook, his account of the antient Swedish law of fatisfaction for words of reproach,

Strangers, in what light confidered, and how treated during the middle ages, and under the feudal policy, 327.

Sugar canes, when first brought from Asia into Europe, and thence carried to America, 331. Sultans, Turkish, their despotic power, 188.

How nevertheless limited, 189.

Superstition, its influence in the legal proceedings during the middle ages, 51.

Swifs, the superior discipline of their troops, in the fifteenth century, 113. Teach other nations the advantages of infantry over cavalry, 114.

Tacitus, his account of the antient Germans compared with that of Caefar, 206.

Tenures, feudal, the origin of, 15. See Feudal Syftem, and I and.

Theology, scholastic, the first literary pursuits at the revival of learning in Europe, 74.

Truce of God, an account of, 280.

Turkey, origin of, its government, 187. despotic genius of this government, ib. No hereditary nobility in, 188. The authority of the Sultans, how checked, 189. Origin of the Janizaties, ib. Becomes formidable to the Christian Princes, 192.

Vandals, their cruel devastations in the invasion of Spain, 199. The havoc made by them in Africa, 200. See Goths.

there, 287. The total annual revenue of Vaffals under the feudal fyslem, a view of their flavish condition, 16. 39. How they obtained infranchisement, 40. How antiently diffinguished from freemen, 216. Their wretched state under their seudal masteris, 226. Note ix.

> Venice, the long duration of its civil conflitution, and its flourishing flate at the time of the league of Cambray, 117. Its pofteffions fessions dismembered by the consederates, 718. Dissolves the consederacy, 119. Its rise and progress, 132. Defects in its constitution, 133. The excellency of its naval institutions, 134. Its extensive commerce, 135.

FIRST VOLUME.

Visconti, rise of the family of, in Milan,

141.

Union of the Aragonese nobles to controul the undue exercise of regal power, explained, 343. This privilege abrogated by Peter IV. 344.

Universities, the first establishment of, in Europe, 323.

`.w

War, a comparison between the manner of carrying on, by barbarous and by civilized nations, 9. How rendered feeble in its operations by the feudal policy, 17. The profession of arms, the most honourable, in untivilized nations, 67. The rise of standing armies traced, 92. By what means standing forces became general, 112. The superiority of infantry in, how taught, 113.

Wars, private, for the redressing personal injuries, under the feudal policy, an inquirg into, 43. Methods taken to abolish this hostile practice, 46. Judicial combat pro-hibited, 47. Inquiry into the sources of these customs, 274. Note xxi. Who intitled to the privileges of exercifing, ib. On what occasions undertaken, 275. Who included, or bound to engage in these disputes, 276. Who excluded from under-The cruel manner of profetaking, ib. cuting them, 277. A chronological account of the expedients made use of, to suppress them, 278. Truce of God, an account of, ib. Brotherhood of God, an account of, 282. Royal truce, what, ib. Saxon laws of England, for putting an end to them, 285. The obstinate attachment of the Spaniards to this practice, 287. The calamities occasioned in Germany by,

Welsh, antient, strangers killed with impunity

by them, 328.

Willa, widow of duke Hugo, extract from her charter of manufation, granted to Cleriza, one of her flaves, 270.

Willermus, archbishop of Tyre, his account of Constantinople, 245.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.